U.S. recession signals grow

Times New Services

The recession economists have been predicting for so long may be at hand, with some 15,000 Ford Motor Co. employees (including 2,500 in Windsor) learning the hard way the meaning of an economic slowdown.

The company already has 41,000 workers on indefinite layoff.

In order to cut its growing losses, Ford said it is closing indefinitely closing one plant, eliminating shifts at four other plants, and phasing out two manufacturing plants.

And at General Motors, the company said it is eliminating shifts at five car or truck assembly plants and reducing line speeds at three others.

The move will place an additional 12,000 hourly employees on indefinite layoff, GM said. The No. 1 automaker already has 80,000 indefinitely idled blue-collar workers.

GM would not estimate the impact of the cutback on salaried workers, 2,100 of whom already have been laid off permanently.

Housing construction, crippled by high mortgage rates, plunged 22 percent in March, the largest monthly drop in 20 years. (But in B.C., the situation is reversed—see page 31).

The apparent onset of a recession has sent ripples through financial institutions, and Chase Manhattan Bank today cut its prime lending rate to 19¾ per cent, down from the prevailing record 20 per cent rate.

As sales of new cars continue to slump, several auto-related industries are reporting lower earnings. Stockholders of Uniroyal Inc., which makes tires and other auto components, were told the company expected a first quarter loss of $12 million compared to $6 million profit in the first quarter a year ago.

A steep drop in all industrial production was reported Tuesday by the Federal Reserve Board, the U.S. money manager. If production continues to fall, the American factory worker will pay for it—in jobs.

Treasury Secretary G. William Miller, acknowledging the economic slowdown was beginning, said in Washington the unemployment rate probably would rise to 7.25 percent by the end of the year. It is presently 6.2 percent.

House and Senate Republicans used the occasion of "Income Tax Day" to blame President Carter and Democratic members of Congress for soaring inflation and high taxes.

"America is losing its shirt to Jimmy Carter's high taxes and the big spending Congress," said Sen. Bill Roth (Rep-Del.) The average American household paid more than $6,100 in federal taxes for 1979 and will pay $7,800 under the new Carter budget, he said.

In other economic news, the Commerce Department reported corporate profits after taxes declined 0.9 percent on a seasonally adjusted basis in the last three months of 1979 compared with the third quarter.

'One hell of night' by crater

VANCOUVER, Wash. (UPI) — One of three men who defied authorities and climbed erupting Mount St. Helens says the climbers briefly lost their nerve near the summit because the volcano let loose with an eruption. But it was too late to turn back.

All they could do was dig into the gooey, half-frozen muck near the lip of the volcano's cone while it shuddered and roared directly over their heads all night, said Otto Sieber, 42.

The group pulled together in the morning and climbed the remaining 244 metres up over the volcano's rim and saw "Dante's Inferno" close up, Sieber said Tuesday in an interview with UPI.

Sieber, Brian Witt, 26, and Andy Sterne, 21, all of Seattle, said they made the 2,949-metre climb during the weekend to film beer commercials.

Above the timberline, the mountain has been officially restricted; persons caught there face a $500 fine and up to six months in jail. The three climbers were not caught and Forest Service officials were discussing whether to press charges.

The actual ascent started at 11 a.m. Saturday.

"We underestimated the difficulties of the climb and were unable to reach the summit (on the first day) largely because of the mud and the ice," Sieber said.

"The (volcanic) ash had settled on the snow on the average of several inches on the upper slopes. It turned into a gooey soup that ran down in rivulets.

"We got about 800 feet from the summit when that eruption occurred just before the sun set Saturday and we lost our nerve and just dug a hole in the side and kept ourselves warm."

U.S. Geological Survey scientists reported that particular eruption blew steam and ash thousands of metres into the air and was clearly visible more than 50 miles away in Portland, Ore.

"We huddled together and survived the night" while the ground shook "kind of like a waterbed effect on the snow and ice," Sieber said.

At first light, they climbed on.

"I'm a (independent) filmmaker. I followed those rock climbers up with my movie camera . . . it was a little more exciting than I bargained for — when you are on a rock ledge 2,743 metres up, you can't go down."

Then they crested the crater's rim "and saw Dante's Inferno. A hell hole is what it really looked like . . . it sounded like a continuous avalanche. Various sides (around the crater) were caving in intermittently."

Sieber said the crater was "like a moon surface on top. There was thick, flying dust and where rocks were falling it was like craters, shellholes — pock-marked all around."

Then the mountain let loose.

"It was like a big explosive charge going off — no muzzle. It did not have a roar, it was popping and cracking. It was like an avalanche sound with firecrackers going off."

Fortunately, the wind carried the debris north, away from the climbers, Sieber said, noting that the "explosions were coming out of the throat" of the volcano.

While staring at the inferno, "It made me very humble," Sieber added. "I'm an agnostic and I almost — it really kind of confirmed the existence of a power greater than us."

He laughed and added: "It makes you think about not wanting to be in hell."

Auto sales sour

DETROIT (UPI) — The normally upbeat spring selling season is turning sour for U.S. automakers, who reported Tuesday that early April sales slumped 24.4 percent below the same period last year.

The gloomy report meant the industry's year-long slump is continuing without letup.

Sales of domestic cars in the April 1-10 period reached 184,788 units, down 24.4 percent on a daily selling basis from 217,290 in the same period last year. There were nine selling days in the period this year and eight last year.

All domestic automakers had sales declines except for Volkswagen of America, which managed to hold steady with last year's levels.

General Motors Corp. reported sales of 121,921 cars in the period, down 21.2 percent from last year on a daily selling basis. Ford Motor Co. sales of 38,755 cars were down 33.2 percent, while Chrysler Corp. sales of 15,384 cars were off 31.5 percent.

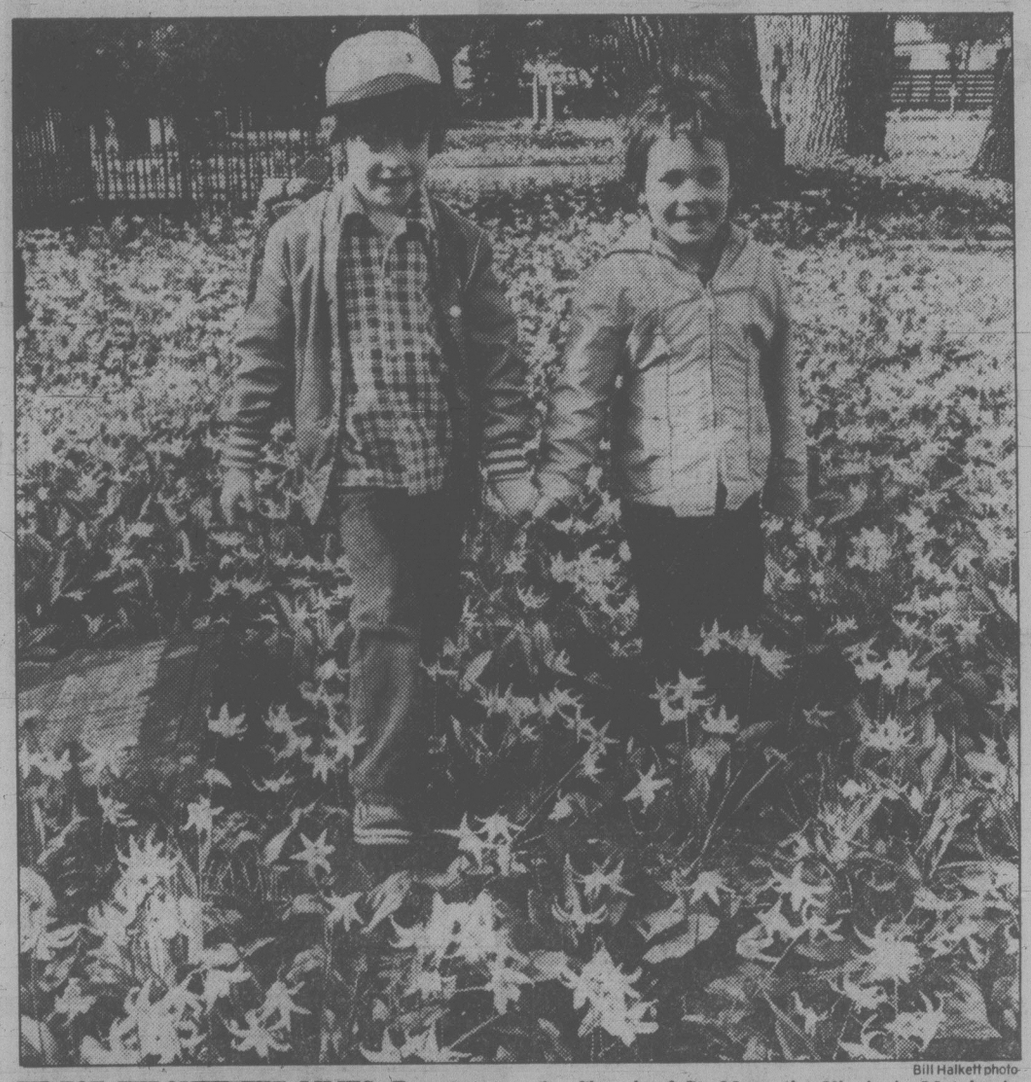

VWA said it sold 4,328 U.S.-built Rabbits, roughly equivalent based on daily rates to 3,829 last year. American Motors Corp. sales were estimated at 4,400 cars, down 8.8 percent from last year. AMC reports sales figures only at the end of each month.

One Big Three analyst said consumers now are torn between the desire to buy a car and progressively worse economic news.

"The major economic surveys are registering steady or increasing consumer plans to buy cars," the analyst said. "But the economic outlook is uncertain."

So far this year, domestic car sales by all five makers are off 15.2 percent from last year.

GM is down 9.5 percent on sales of 1,264,973 units; Ford is off 27.6 percent on 467,141 and Chrysler is off 26.2 percent on volume of 204,121 cars.

Auditor blasts clerks' output

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government is not getting a fair day's work for a day's pay out of the 350,000-strong public service because of sloppy management and improper training, says Auditor-General J. J. Macdonell in his annual report released today.

Macdonell, reporting to Parliament for the spending year 1978-79, says spot testing of clerical workers in the government found they were working at only 61 per cent of potential.

He says that even if their performance could be raised to the 80 per cent considered the "minimum acceptable," the work of the 50,000 clerks in the public service could be done by 38,000.

"This is a thought-provoking situation if it is typical of the government as a whole, which it probably is," the auditor-general says.

The auditor-general also reported that the unemployment insurance commission paid $290 million in overpayments in the year ending March 31, 1979.

Employment Minister Lloyd Axworthy quickly issued a statement today outlining measures to solve the problem.

In his statement, Axworthy said employers are mainly responsible for unemployment insurance overpayments because they don't fill in the record of employment forms properly.

"This area alone accounts for $125 million of the auditor-general's estimated figure of $290 million," the statement said.

The minister said that while the unemployment insurance commission now is working with employers to correct the situation, "I would like to appeal strongly to employers to assist us by asking their staff to make every effort

Canada considering Iran sanctions move

Times News Services

Canada is considering economic sanctions and an embargo against Iran to protest the seizure of American hostages at the U.S. embassy in Tehran.

"We are seriously considering the question of economic sanctions and an embargo," External Affairs Minister Mark Macguigan told reporters outside the House of Commons Tuesday. "An embargo may be a very effective step and we certainly have to give consideration to that.

"It would be a very general one which would embrace pretty well all aspects of our trade and commerce with Iran."

MacGuigan said a break in diplomatic relations with Iran would not be "meaningful" because Canada was no longer represented there.

Canada closed its embassy in Tehran in January when Ambassador Ken Taylor and his staff spirited six Americans out of Tehran.

Canadian trade with Iran amounted to less than $30 million last year, down from almost $200 million in 1978 prior to the overthrow of the Shah.

According to an FP News Service Washington report, Canadian Ambassador Peter Towe made the recommendation in a confidential telegram last Saturday to MacGuigan.

Towe's telegram apparently tied the suggested move to the vexing problem of fishing rights, under examination before the U.S. Senate foreign relations committee here this week.

Canada contends that U.S boats are taking tuna in our waters on the west coast, and scallops on the east coast, and a score of American boats were seized last fall. The Americans contend that the sei-

Only few to get home aid

OTTAWA (CP) — Finance Minister Allan MacEachen says perhaps only 7,000 to 10,000 homeowners will be able to take advantage of proposed new federal assistance for those renewing mortgages this year.

MacEachen told reporters Tuesday that roughly 90 per cent of the estimated 350,000 persons renewing mortgages will be able to keep their monthly payments to 30 per cent of their incomes or less.

And many of the other 10 per cent may have enough equity in their homes to allow them to refinance their mortgages without government assistance, he added.

Funders deaf to VSO appeal

Local politicians held firm Tuesday and refused to increase intermunicipal cultural grants to the Victoria Symphony or the Bastion Theatre.

Both groups had protested the allocations made by Allan Purdy's cultural funding advisory group of the intermunicipal committee and the parent body directed Purdy to give them another hearing.

The symphony got only $45,000 this year as its civic grant, down from $58,000 last year. Purdy's subcommittee said the symphony hadn't worked to reduce its deficit.

The symphony actually will end up with only $30,000 as the intermunicipal committee voted to withhold $15,000 and apply it to the organization's unpaid rent at the Royal Theatre.

The Bastion got $37,000 — $5,000 more than last year. It was criticized for a too-large administrative budget and a poor over-all financial picture.

In a special report to the intermunicipal committee, Purdy said his subcommittee listened to the symphony but added: "It would seem unfair to give any special consideration to one or two organizations based on newly developed programs and/or fund-raising campaigns."

It also turned down the Bastion but added that it hoped some way could be found to assist the theatre group with its disproportionately costly theatre rental budget item.

The report from Purdy's group said they had only a total of $226,000 — shared by the four core municipalities — to give out and to give more to these groups would cut some other cultural group's grant.

Similarly, Four Seasons Musical Theatre Society was turned down.

Purdy said his subcommittee expressed some concern at the group's plans to put on an original musical this summer based on Emily Carr at a total cost of $128,000.

The subcommittee thought there was a high degree of risk involved, as the script was not yet finished, personnel and artists hadn't been booked and the over-all budget seemed extraordinarily high for the type of venture.

The intermunicipal committee voted to receive and file Purdy's report.

The only organization to get more money out of the parent intermunicipal committee was the Victoria Festival Society.

Its grant was boosted to $12,800 from $9,000.

President Roy Wooten said if the VFS didn't get the money, muncipalities would have to take over organizing the Victorian Days and May 24 parade.

Sanctions under study zures were illegal, and both sides hope to get the dispute resolved before another fishing — and seizure — season begins.

A presidential aide in Washington said today President Carter may impose new economic and diplomatic sanctions against Iran as early as Thursday but will not consider any military moves until after mid-May.

The aide also said the U.S. government has told its allies that Iran should have ample time by mid-May to respond to the sanctions Carter ordered last week.

If the response is not positive, the official said, the allies will be asked to carry out additional non-military steps aimed at increasing pressure on Iran to free 50 U.S. hostages held since Nov. 4.

He emphasized that each ally will not necessarily be expected to adopt all the sanctions already imposed by the U.S.

In a related development, administration officials say the "steady build-up" of Soviet forces on the Iranian border that has been much talked about in recent days is basically a movement of equipment and not the massing of troops for invasion preparations.

Meanwhile, It was reported in Tehran that fighting broke out overnight in Kurdistan with at least seven Iranian soldiers and revolutionary guards reported killed in separate clashes.

Pars News Agency reported today four soldiers died and 25 were wounded in battles between Kurdish rebels and Iranian army units in Ghassemlou Valley, about 100 kilometres north of the Kurdish city of Mahabad.

The clashes broke a temporary peace which had settled over the northwestern Iranian province since the dispute with Iraq erupted some days ago.

Pars also reported a powerful bomb exploded today in the southwestern refinery town of Abadan, killing three persons and injuring 24.

The blast was so powerful a car and two motorcycles were destroyed and several shops were damaged.

Iranian towns in the oil rich-province of Khuzestan have been the targets for sabotage since the overthrow of the shah. Iranian authorities have accused the Iraqi government of helping and financing saboteurs in the region.

In other developments, the Iranian army demanded free movement today in the Kurdish city of Sanandaj as protest demonstrations broke out in the city.

Radio Tehran said the army urged the people of Sanandaj to allow the army freedom to move anywhere in the city.

But Kurdish sources in Sanandaj said a 1,000-man armed column declared it wanted to enter Sanandaj and go on to Sardasht, a town on the Iraqi border nearby.

The Kurdish sources said townspeople blocked the roads with furniture and other things and the Kurdish guerrillas took positions to bar the way.

The Kurdish groups have said they will fight any Iraqi forces entering Iranian territory but they have also resolutely opposed any Iranian army takeover of the northwestern Iranian province of Kurdistan.

Minimum pay review pledged

Labor Minister Jack Heinrich said Tuesday B.C.'s $3-an-hour minimum wage is under review.

He was replying to NDP labor critic Karen Sanford who said the minimum wage must be increased and it should be indexed to the cost of living.

"I have been reviewing the matter of the minimum wage and I have recommendations before me," he replied.

"It's interesting that question from the opposition should come at this time because there is a meeting scheduled on it this week."

Some pubs stockpile beer

Dates for contract talks between B.C. breweries and their employees haven't even been set yet but some Vancouver hotel and pub managers are already stockpiling beer in anticipation of a strike.

A check of Victoria hotels and pubs reveals no hoarding here.

The three-month strike two years ago ended up costing the B.C. economy some $50 million.

Some Vancouver hotels have stocked as many as 6,000 cases, about four times the normal stock.

Officials of Carling O'Keefe, Labatt's, Columbia and Molson breweries have been meeting with the 1,200-member Brewery and Soft Drink Workers' Union to set a date for contract talks.

The current contract expires on Sunday.

Sloppy managers blamed in report to give the commission accurate information."

Claimants are responsible for the other major cause of overpayments by not reporting when they are working and earning while claiming unemployment insurance. The practice cost the government $69 million in the fiscal year.

The auditor-general found various errors by the commission itself were responsible for $96 million in overpayments, the minister said in his statement. Various control measures had been brought in to counteract these.

The annual report, the seventh and final one by Macdonell who retires this year, is the usual compendium of horror stories of government mismanagement and inefficiencies costing millions in taxpayer dollars.

This year's version — delayed by the February election — contains accounts of waste involving government telephones, cost overruns in multi-million-dollar public works projects, more overpayments of unemployment insurance and inadequate cost controls by such agencies as the billion-dollar-a-year Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA), the Canadian transport commissvon and the CBC.

The report notes that some headway is being made in getting control of government spending — currently running at more than $50 billion a year — but bemoans the fact that implementation of key recommendations in previous reports has been stalled or ignored.

As far back as 1975, Macdonell complained about the lack of clear, understandable information on government spending made available to the members of Parliament — the people ultimately responsible for spending approval.

Yet, he says bureaucrats at treasury board, the government department responsible for regular control on departmental spending, have been "stalling" an important project to improve the reporting system.

"I strongly urge that this whole matter receive priority attention at the highest levels of the government," he says.

Macdonell is also critical of the tardiness in appointing key financial control officers, known as comptrollers, in each department to help senior managers keep control of spending. This was recommended in 1976.

Accountability of the 400-odd Crown corporations remains negligible in spite of repeated warnings of the problem in earlier reports, he says, but notes that legislation planned by the previous Clark government showed some promise of getting them under control.

The audit of the performance of clerical workers was made after earlier investigations turned up weaknesses in departmental systems for monitoring productivity. The clerks were chosen because their routine work, such as filing and typing, was easily measurable.

The 61 per cent performance rating compared with output at about 88 per cent of potential found in a survey of 87 companies in private business.

$298,500 award

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Nanaimo motorist was awarded $298,500 damages Tuesday for injuries he received Oct. 16, 1974, when he drove his sports car into a pile of dirt that workmen had left on the road.

The B.C. Supreme Court award was against Greater Nanaimo Water District.

Mr. Justice C. Locke was told that Bruce Abell, now 34, was going to his business premises, where he serves as an automotive repair specialist, when he hit the dirt, was thrown against the windshield and suffered injuries that will restrict his function as a car specialist.

The judge noted there was a suggestion during the trial that children may have tampered with warning signs, but he held that the dirt was not sufficiently marked. Locke held Abell was 15-per-cent liable for his injuries by not wearing his seatbelt and reduced the award by that amount.

Water bombers brace for fiery season in woods

The Canadian Press

The B.C. forest fire season officially opened Tuesday. But the Prince George forest district couldn't wait.

Since Jan. 1, eight fires have been fought, with the largest and latest a 150-acre fire near McBride during the weekend.

Experts have been predicting B.C. could face serious fire hazards this year because of low snowpacks this winter following a dry fall.

Pilots will play a crucial role once again in the annual battle against forest fires, carrying out saturation bombings and searches reminiscent of a Second World War aerial assault.

Walt Weslowsky, in his 20th year of hunting and fighting forest fires from aircraft, said the annual battle still holds excitement for him.

"Due to the type of work and fire behavior, there's always something new happening," he said in an interview. "There's always a challenge. You can never get complacent."

Weslowsky is chief pilot and flight operations superintendent for Conair Aviation Ltd., of Abbotsford. He, along with 37 other pilots, 15 planes and a few ground crew, are part of a Conair fire-fighting force which contracts out to the B.C. Forest Service during the fire-risk months from April 15 to Oct. 15.

The low moisture levels this year mean runoff streams will be fewer in number, making it more difficult for fire-fighters to collect water.

They will need all the water they can get if last year was any indication -- 1979 was the second-worst fire season in B.C.'s history with 3,800 fires reported.

Last year, firefighting cost the government about $20 million.

"All the signs are pointing to a hot, dry summer again," said Weslowsky.

And a long, hard summer for the pilots. Many of them are freelancers, and during the fire season, they are in the air almost constantly.

There are four degrees of alert -- the lowest allows the pilots off the base, the highest requires them to be in the air immediately.

But the long hours are also profitable. Pilots earn between $25,000 and $35,000 for four to six months work.

And this kind of flying isn't necessarily restricted to a few months a year. Weslowsky and some other pilots spent parts of the winter in Mexico, dropping chemical dispersants on an oil slick.

Weslowsky said flying water bombers or bird dogs (small one-engined spotter planes) is safer than piloting bush planes, even though several pilots have been killed during his years in the aerial fire-fighting business.

"Safety is a pretty important aspect of the whole operation. . . The time spent at lower elevations is short, just a few seconds."

The forest service likes to get a fire under control within hours of it breaking out. Beyond this short time span, a fire starts causing excessive damage and expense.

The forest service is using innovations like the "rapattack" program to quickly establish offensives against fire outbreaks. The program uses helicopters to get highly-trained fire-fighters to the scene of an outbreak. The men then rappel down a rope, and, using chain saws, clear a landing site for the choppers, which return carrying reinforcements.

And now that the fire season has started, he said, it is illegal to light any fires, except campfires, without a permit.

He said rules include warnings against building fires too large, too close to trees and other combustible materials, and call for people to clear a space for the fire so combustible ground cover is removed.

High school kids hit stock jackpot

VANCOUVER (CP) — Six Vancouver high school students left the Vancouver Stock Exchange richer by $500 on Tuesday after winning first prize in a market strategy contest sponsored by the exchange.

Eighty teams, each comprising five or six students from B.C. high schools, took part in a 5½-month investment contest sponsored by the VSE.

The Eric Hamber Secondary School won the contest by realizing a $193,557 profit on their original (but fictional) investment of $50,000.

Each team started with a hypothetical $50,000 to be invested in securities on the Vancouver stock and curb exchanges, between October, 1979 and March of this year. The conditions, though simulated, were close to the real thing.

The Hamber students said they didn't start investing until mid-December, so their "profit" was actually earned in about three months.

"We traded only in penny stocks," said one student. "Some of the other teams from our school invested in industrial stocks, but they didn't do nearly as well."

The second-place team, also from Vancouver, upped their investment to $219,611 by having some success in higher-priced stocks.

Dentists say governing college a 'tyrant'

VANCOUVER (CP) — Many Vancouver-area dentists believe that the College of Dental Surgeons polices the profession with a heavy hand, but is ineffectual when lobbying for its own membership, says a brief to the college.

The Vancouver and District Dental Society has called on the college to produce a major report on all aspects of B.C. dentistry.

In its brief, the society says the college is viewed by its members as "a tyrant, persecuting the unsuspecting practitioner."

The society says the report should be written by an independent consultant paid by the provincial government, the college or by private money.

In his submission to the college at its executive council meeting this week, Dr. Paul Rondeau of Vancouver said many dentists dislike the college because it does such things as require them to continually take upgrading courses.

The regulations, which include the power to suspend or reprimand the members, rob the dentist of his independence and his rights without adequate recourse in law, Rondeau said in a brief.

The submission comes on the heels of a long dispute between the college and Dr. Murray Bloom, treasurer of the executive council, the elected body that runs the College.

Bloom accused the college of certain fiscal irregularities and the college in turn charged Bloom with unprofessional conduct and of practising poor dentistry. Bloom challenged the college's right to conduct a court of inquiry and the matter is about to go to the B.C. Court of Appeal.

In his brief this week, Rondeau said he was reflecting the sentiment contained in two motions passed overwhelmingly in early March by about 200 Vancouver and area dentists attending a regular society meeting.

The motions endorse the college's view that dental insurers should not have the right to set dental fees, and call for a report on the state of the profession in B.C.

Many dentists are unhappy at the way the college operates, said Dr. Egon Nikolai of Burnaby, president of the Vancouver and District Dental Society.

"The college is alienating itself from dentists," he said. "It is supposed to speak for dentists, but its first job is to protect the public."

This twin role, Nikolai said, pits the college against itself, since by law it must enforce the Dentistry Act while lobbying for dentists' needs.

College president Dr. Ted Ramage was not available for comment Tuesday.

The executive council, however, has agreed to study the motions.

Judge heads nurses' inquiry

Mr. Justice Henry Hutcheon of the B.C. Supreme Court has been appointed industrial inquiry commissioner in the government nurses' dispute.

Labor Minister Jack Heinrich said Tuesday that Hutcheon will begin immediately. Both sides earlier agreed that the commissioner's recommendations would not be binding.

Hutcheon has an initial 14 days in which to hold talks and Heinrich said he is hoping for a settlement within that time.

Heinrich also said both sides have agreed to co-operate and make commission hearings meaningful and productive.

Some of the nurses, who are in a legal strike position, were off the job last week, but there have been no reports of job action this week. Heinrich said negotiating committees for the two nursing groups have assured him they will maintain normal operations while the commission is in place.

The Government Employee Relations Bureau has offered eight per cent a year over three years, which compounds to 26 per cent over the contract.

The Registered Nurses Association of B.C. and the Psychiatric Nurses Association of B.C. — representing the 2,700 nurses at mental institutions and public health units throughout the province — are seeking a 39-per-cent raise over 27 months, which would raise the base starting salary to $1,450 a month from $1,361.

The nurses want to remain equal with the 12,500 nurses employed by B.C.'s 113 general hospitals who have a tentative agreement giving them a 44-per-cent increase over 27 months.

Midnight Nanaimo ferry run possible

NANAIMO — A request for a midnight sailing between Nanaimo and Horseshoe Bay will be considered April 28 by the B.C. Ferry Corp.

Highways and Transportation Minister Alex Fraser said Tuesday he felt the presentation from Nanaimo citizens is worth presenting to the board of directors.

He did not promise a midnight run, however.

"We did try a late ferry from Tsawwassen a few years ago but that wasn't too successful," he said.

"That doesn't mean a similar run up-Island wouldn't work. Traffic is building up at a terrific rate. We are the victims of our own enterprise since we opened the North Island Highway.

"Maybe a midnight sailing would be well used and bring some relief."

Fraser also announced his ministry will double ferry service between Campbell River and Quadra Island May 15-Sept.8. The double service would be in effect between 7 a.m. and 6 p.m. daily.

Natural gas guzzling

It's never too late. That's about the only way to describe the foresight that led to Universities, Science and Communications minister Pat McGeer's decision to study natural gas as fuel for automobiles. But despite the intention to spend $100,000 to recycle 15-year-old technology, any serious plan to reduce British Columbia's and the country's dependence on import oil should be welcomed.

However, McGeer and the provincial cabinet should realize that neither is it too late to introduce a realistic natural gas pricing policy. Without such forethought now, the provincial government could end up like the federal government — paying large fuel subsidies to car and truck owners.

By comparing the wholesale prices of natural gas (6.6 cents per litre) and gasoline (17 cents per litre) and then pointing out that Canada's imported oil subsidy is reaching $3 billion annually, McGeer makes a persuasive economic argument in favor of a massive switch to dual-fuel system automobiles. But the minister neglected to say that the price of natural gas to B.C. consumers is heavily underwritten by Victoria and United States consumers.

Domestic gas prices are 70 cents per thousand cubic feet below the cost of production. Natural gas remains a profitable business only because the export price is about three times the domestic price.

The minister claims that a 40 per cent increase in B.C. gas production would provide enough energy to power all vehicles in the province. At today's prices, it is estimated that subsidy to motorists would be in the range of $137 million a year.

Granted, B.C. is a resource wealthy province, but the question must be asked: Should the province's taxpayers shield motorists from the real price of their fuel?

It makes good sense to replace the use of as much oil as is possible by using of B.C.'s abundant natural gas reserves, more of which seem to be found every day.

Like oil, however, natural gas is a finite fossil fuel that should be used efficiently. In terms of conservation, it makes little sense to encourage wasteful habits by government price subsidies.

Canada's pricing policy on gasoline is a case in point. In other countries, including the United States, demand has decreased in the face of rapidly rising fuel costs. Canadians, however, are using about six per cent more gas than a year ago. We also pay the least per gallon.

McGeer will be looking to Ottawa for concessions on the excise and road taxes normally applied to gasoline in an effort to make natural gas more appealing to consumers. Although incentives may be needed in the short run to encourage people to convert automobiles to burn natural gas, neither the federal nor the provincial government should find itself in a position of endlessly subsidizing motorists.

Open meetings needed

A decade ago, the main jobs of the provincial Capital Improvement District Commission were to run beautification projects on the Victoria waterfront and to administer grants for these projects.

The commission did some excellent work. The landscaping of both the Gorge waterway and of the Inner Harbor causeway go to its credit. Yet its projects were mainly on the periphery of major planning for Victoria, and its procedures were not of great importance to Victorians.

Today all that has changed. Because of welcome provincial funding for major Victoria projects, the Provincial Capital Commission (as the CIDC has been renamed) is one of the most powerful bodies influencing Victoria's development.

It has been the key group behind the development of plans for a convention centre on the former Reid site. It has been involved with both the renovations and operations of the restored Crystal Garden. Doubtless in future it will become involved with the development of other pieces of provincially-owned waterfront land, such as Ship's Point.

The decisions it makes about these sites will have a profound effect on Victoria's future, both aesthetically and economically. By controlling waterfront developments, it is shaping the showplace of Victoria for years to come.

Because of the importance of these decisions, it is time to open the PCC's proceedings up to the public. As has been suggested in a bill introduced in the legislature by Victoria MLA Charles Barber, its meetings should be generally open; its minutes available to the public.

The PCC is wielding very nearly as much power over Victoria's future as are the city's elected representatives. The commission should be required to be at least as open in its proceedings as is city council.

Far left

In the Times April 5, MLA Jack Davis, pointed out that there currently is no federal funds for a pipe line to Vancouver Island. Perhaps Mr. Davis should ask the Premier of British Columbia where he stands on this issue. If the premier stands facing our American neighbors then Vancouver Island would be on the far right of Canada. However if the premier turns his back on our American friends then Vancouver Island would be far left. There should be no difficulty in obtaining funds from Mr. Trudeau's government in the far left position.

Another little Island that was far left not only got a "Viva Cuba" and a "Viva Fidel Castro" from comrade Trudeau but a whole bunch of tax payers bucks. In fact it was $4 million in out right grants and $10 million in loans at three per cent interest over 30 years and to lessen the burden on this poor communist country the repayments don't even start until 1982.

If the premier was a Western Nationalist he wouldn't have to send one half billion dollars each year to the confederation club. He would then be able to buy from the world markets at world market prices without the 30 per cent tariff mark up for Ontario and Quebec. He would also be able to sell our own products on the world markets without embargos and other interference that protect the central power base. He could then buy what ever he wanted including a gas pipeline to Vancouver Island.

The nice part is that he or the people of British Columbia wouldn't have to turn our backs on the beliefs, ideals and allies that Western Canadians grew up to love, cherish and respect. — W. J. Paterson, 3730 Savannah Street.

OXFAM helps

Despite the considerable coverage given Zimbabwe because of the recent elections, the human side of the story was sadly neglected.

The war severely disrupted the rural economy and a recent drought has combined to cause extreme problems for over one million refugees and displaced persons.

Impending critical food shortages can be averted but only if Zimbabweans receive support now.

Oxfam supported the refugees through many years of exile, where they learned practical skills. But right now skills alone are not enough.

A shipment of seeds and tools today, or the money to be used for locally available supplies is worth far more than a ton of food that is here today and gone tomorrow.

Oxfam is supplying the seeds and tools but the need is great. Your support is essential to stop severe malnutrition, which the Times of London reports is already affecting three in ten children.

Oxfam has a long history of working with people who are helping themselves. We ask you you send a generous donation today to help the people of Zimbabwe. — Harvey MacKinnon, OXFAM, Box 12,000, Vancouver.

Seek the facts

I feel obliged to reply to the letter from a group of physicians at the Royal Jubilee Hospital, lamenting the end of obstetrical and pediatric services when the new Victoria General Hospital opens at Helmcken Road.

The decision of the Capital Regional District Hospital Board to have one unit for obstetrics pediatrics in the city was made following recommendations of family physicians and obstetricians who sat as an advisory group to the Hospital Board. This group of experts opted for regionalization as it is believed to provide better care to mothers and children. An obstetrical unit should deliver around 2,500 babies per year to give optimal care and allow for 24 hour emergency on site coverage. This does not exist at either the Jubilee or present Victoria General Hospital. For instance, an emergency caesarean section in the middle of the night may often take up to 30 minutes when the obstetrician and anaesthist need to be called from home. With these specialists present in the hospital, 24 hours per day, this operation can be done in 15 minutes. This will probably be a reality in the new Helmcken Road Hospital, but in neither hospital if there are two obstetrical units in town.

The rest of the letter consists of a series of suppositions rather than facts. No evidence is produced to support the concern that an extra 20 minutes travel by car increases the hazard to mother and baby. There may be special cases in which this does matter, but I know of no studies in Victoria or elsewhere to back up this assertion.

The concern about having the intern look after the mother in labor is generally unfounded. Most obstetrical interns in this city deliver more babies in one week than most family physicians do in one year. With a little planning most physicians can leave home 20 minutes earlier than was their usual pattern.

The assertion that doctors now practicing at the Jubilee or Saanich Penninsula Hospital will be denied obstetrical privileges at the Helmcken Road site has no basis in fact and there is concern whether physicians delivering a small number of babies per year are able to remain competent in this changing field. In the future it may be recommended that certain physicians cease practising obstetrics as some have done already.

Although a woman's particular family physician may have ceased practicing obstetrics, there will always be a wide choice of alternative physicians available.

The importance of public input into the way obstetrical services are delivered in this city is vitally important and I hope that before making their decision citizens will demand more facts than are provided by this group of doctors. — Derek Carroll, M.D., James Bay Community Project, 435 Simcoe Street.

Tasteless ads

In my opinion this proliferation of female hygiene commercials on TV is in very bad taste.

These dollar-hungry TV operators are missing one great opportunity: why not have commercials on male contraceptives?

I wonder what the public reaction to this would be? It should not be any more offensive than what we are forced to watch on the screen many times every day. — R. Grant Stagg, 803-450 Simcoe Street.

DAN TURNER

The day the Tories lost the vote

"Don't ask me about that — I'm still trying to find out what happened myself."

Flora MacDonald, in an interview last week.

Today's news is supposed to be exciting and yesterday's a bore, yet for all you'll hear about yesterday's opening of Parliament it will never measure up to the day before yesterday.

Dec. 13, 1979: Four months and a day ago as measured by the pedantic ticking of the Julian calendar, but two short days ago in the history of Canadian Parliament.

The day Joe Clark's spastic but virile young government dropped mysteriously to the floor, dead.

Cause of death: "Yeas 139; Nays 133" — the Conservative government had been defeated on a budget vote after only 193 days in power.

An election is held and the Liberals are returned to power, but the campaign is an anti-climax; as Bill Neville, Clark's chief of staff, is to admit later, it is over before it starts.

An early loss

On Dec. 3 — 10 days before the Conservative defeat in the House of Commons — the Gallup Poll has reported that the Liberals are 19 points ahead of the Tories in a poll taken in early November, a massive advantage that no party could ever expect to eliminate during a seven-week election campaign.

"I am a total believer," says Neville, "that we lost it before it was called."

What still astounds Conservative loyalists and even many Conservative politicians is how any government — even a minority government — could have squandered away its mandate before passing any significant legislation or at least having handed out enough patronage to keep the troops up for the next battle.

"We got deked right out of our shorts," says one former cabinet minister, "and it's never been explained why."

The event has been documented from the Liberal side:

Pierre Elliott Trudeau has announced his resignation from the Liberal leadership but his aides are convinced that he might stay on if an election is called and the party was desperate.

Allan MacEachen, Liberal House Leader; Jim Coutts, Trudeau's chief aide, and Keith Davey, holding onto his reputation as the party's top strategist, go to work on Liberal MPs, convincing them that they should all show up for a vote on an NDP sub-amendment to the proposed budget and try to topple the government.

Donald Macdonald, Trudeau's heir apparent, makes frantic phone calls from Toronto trying to convince his supporters in caucus to avoid the confrontation on the grounds that the Liberals will be better off after they have elected a new leader.

Many Liberals think he's right. Jeanne Sauve, who took the chair as House speaker for the first time yesterday, mutters "I don't know why we're doing this" as members enter the House to vote.

The Conservatives don't seem to know that the Liberals are doing that right up to the last moment, which is amazing, because the Liberals have held their annual Christmas party the night before and are blabbing to anyone who will listen that they intend to go for broke.

The Conservative decison-making process on what to do about a very difficult situation takes 12 hours. Maximum.

On Thursday, Dec. 13, they begin their day with a staff meeting at 7:30 a.m. in an alcove of the parliamentary restaurant, which should indicate they are vigilant but does not.

Conversation swings into what looks like the likely days for Christmas adjournment and recess.

Nancy Jamieson, Clark's legislative assistant, interrupts to take note of the fact that if five members of the Social Credit Party do what they say they are going to do and abstain on the vote — which she has no reason to believe they will not — then the government is going to lose and there will be an election instead of a Christmas recess.

When laughter fills the alcove Jamieson tells the assembled they can laugh if they want, but from what she can see it appears there is going to be an election campaign as of the next day.

Other issues are discussed, then the format shifts to the prime minister's board room in Parliament's Centre Block, where Clark chairs a meeting of his closest staff members that discusses various and sundry issues until it is Jamieson's turn to speak, and Clark asks here about the vote.

She says it appears the government is going to lose the vote, and when he asks her what she means she says "we don't have the numbers" and the Liberals seem intent on bringing the government down.

Again there is laughter and note is taken of the fact that the Liberals would not dare defeat the government when they don't have a leader.

Nevertheless Clark tells her to put in a call to External Affairs Minister Flora MacDonald, who is in Brussels at a NATO meeting. If MacDonald can make it back and Social Credit does not abstain the vote will be tied and the Speaker will vote in favor of the government.

MacDonald, meanwhile, has been checking back regularly to makes sure she isn't needed and her Ottawa staff has been contacting House Leader Walter Baker's office to double-check, but they say no, and she is sent a telegram reading:

"We have no — repeat no — intention of asking fm (foreign minister) to return. Despite bold talk we believe diplomatic flu will hit Liberal benches."

MacDonald tries vainly to find a way back — even enquiring as to how one might rent a Concorde — but it is too late. Even if she takes a military plane offered by the Belgian foreign ministry, she would arrive after midnight, and if budget debate proceeds as scheduled the vote is fixed for 10 p.m.

The previous evening Jamieson upon hearing the stories out of the Liberal Christmas party — has taken the trouble to call the Privy Council Office and ask for a memo outlining the government's options.

She hands it to Clark.

It says that even if the government is defeated on this vote, which is only a sub-amendment, it could conceivably brazen its way through and win enough support on the main amendment and final vote to win them, and say the NDP motion was not a matter of confidence that should force a government to resign.

Note is taken that this is dicey. Failure to muster further support would not only bring on an election, but leave the image of a government trying to cling to power unconstitutionally.

There is an easier option.

Until 3 p.m. that afternoon the government can switch the House to other business — there is legislation on the order paper dealing with freedom of information and mortgage interest deductability.

The switch could give the Conservatives more time to manoever; the budget votes could be put off until after Christmas.

At the very least the government could put through some legislation to show voters it had accomplished something.

And over any number of days whatever Liberal unanimity there was about forcing an election — and it appeared shaky — might well dissipate.

Baker and Jamieson went to Clark and reminded him of this option.

Clark turned it down, saying it would make the government look weak and vascillating.

Quebec ying-yangs

Nor would there be any gesture of appeasment toward the Social Crediters, who were offering to back the government if it promised to guarantee more money would be spent in Quebec to ameliorate the budget's belt-tightening impact.

The mood, says one staff member, was that "we're not going to be held ransom by a rump of ying-yangs from rural Quebec."

It was macho government. Hurt by the public perception that he was less of a man than Trudeau, and stung by criticism that his government was indecisive, Clark took a granite-jawed stand.

"It had sort of a game of chicken atmosphere to it," Neville says now. "There was a feeling that if you didn't cut and run, they would cut and run."

When Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau makes his first speech to Canada's 33rd Parliament, a Churchillian opening to his speech would be in order.

"Some chicken game, some neck."

'Olympics helped open window to the world'

By WOLF VON ECKARDT

(Von Eckardt is the architecture critic of The Washington Post)

It may be different in Moscow this year, but in Berlin in 1936 the Olympics were a respite for many Germans who were sickened by Hitler and his Nazis.

The presence of 52 nations during two beautiful August weeks 44 years ago gave those of us who were there the illusion of being part of the world and lightened the shroud of fear that had weighed down on us since Hitler came to power in January, 1933.

Out at the Olympic Stadium the fear actually lifted for a few moments. We cheered when Jesse Owens, the black American, won the 100-meter race. We cheered and cheered and cheered and then some when he won the broad jump. And we just could not stop cheering when he and Ralph Metcalfe, also black, came in first in the 400-meter relay.

And then we booed — yes, we booed loud and clear — when, up there at his festooned grandstand, Adolf Hitler, the master racist, refused to shake hands with our black heroes.

I learned later that the International Olympic Committee had politely told the Fuehrer that he should shake hands with all Olympic winners or none, but that, the next day, Hitler again turned away when a black American winner was presented with his medal.

Jesse Owens diplomatically told reporters that he had not noticed the snub. But everyone else in the stadium noticed and felt safe, in the anonymity and intoxication of the festive excitement, to voice disapproval. We could give vent to spontaneous emotion, more spontaneous, I should think, than the mass hysteria at Nazi party rallies.

This is not to say that all German Olympic spectators were anti-Nazi. Most of them, like sports fans everywhere, were probably apolitical. For them the Third Reich was new, a pompous overture to an unknown opera. Unemployment was drastically down, and the standard of living was drastically up. Berlin, dilapidated and decadent a few years before, suddenly looked as scrubbed as an imperial garrison on the emperor's birthday.

There was applause when the French team, in an excess of misplaced politesse, raised arms in the Hilter salute as it marched past the Fuehrer's grandstand.

But then again we all fell into rhythmic chants when film-maker Leni Riefenstahl flitted about the field between games, instructing her crews with much arm-waving and hand-framing of camera angles: "Leni is a show-off! Leni is a show-off!"

Riefenstahl, no doubt, told her crews to avert their lenses from blacks (there were eight on the U.S. team) and focus on the blond sea of high-breasted Hitler Youth maidens instead. As far as I know, the foreign press, too, made nothing of our noisy commentary, which the Gestapo wisely ignored.

So, of course, did the German newspapers — although the Olympic news could not be suppressed. In the absence of television, radio transmitted the mood as well as the facts of the event all over Germany. A friend who grew up in Marburg told me recently that, years after the games, one school kid would still boast about another, "He runs like Jesse Owens."

The cheering and booing were not serious political demonstrations. For those of us who were present, they were cathartic relief. It just felt good to be able to scream, to release fears and frustrations, to express what we constantly had to repress, except in guarded whispers to close friends and trusted family members. In the Olympic Stadium we were safe. The Gestapo could not possibly arrest 100,000 spectators, probably half of them foreigners, under the eyes of the whole world.

The cheering and booing, more importantly, lifted us out of our isolation. Cutting you off from the world is one of the terrible things totalitarian regimes do. Even in a crowd, you are always alone, because you don't know whom, if anyone, you can trust. You don't know what others are thinking and thus begin to doubt the sanity of your own thoughts.

Germans cheered Jesse Owens' gold medal broadjump at 1936 Berlin Games

Sure, my parents, a very few friends and I, a teenager at the time, knew that Hitler meant war, holocaust and the incarceration of all his active opponents. We knew that Sachsenhausen, one of the first concentration camps, was not 20 miles from where we sat. We had friends there. They were being tortured.

But did our neighbors know? The nice-looking lady on the bench below? Did anyone else in this stadium know? Did 92 per cent of this jovial crowd really vote the Nazi ticket in the last election (in March, 1936), believing that Der Fuehrer would lead them to peace, freedom and glory?

Maybe it was only those 8 per cent who cheered so loudly for Jesse Owens. But there they were. We were not alone.

Hitler had intended to make a good impression on foreign opinion with the Olympics, and he did. Five months earlier he had torn up the Treaty of Versailles and marched into the demilitarized zone of the Rhineland. No one was more surprised than he himself that he got away with it, with nary an Allied murmur. No one even thought of pulling out of the Olympics.

Albert Speer reports in his memoirs that Hitler exulted over the harmonious atmosphere that prevailed during the games. International animosity, Hitler believed, was clearly a thing of the past. Hans Bernd Gisevius, a member of the German resistance, observed later that, impressed by the efficient organization, pomp and circumstance of the Berlin Olympics, many foreigners "allowed themselves to be deceived as to the true nature of the Third Reich."

Whether or not this had any bearing on subsequent events — appeasement at Munich, the Kristallnacht, when the synagogues were burned and the deportation of Jews began, the outbreak of World War II — is anyone's guess.

My guess is that if the Berlin Olympics had benefits for the Nazis, they also had benefits for the German anti-Nazis.

We could talk more freely in the cafes and other public places. We met foreigners, some by pre-arrangement. We could buy foreign newspapers and magazines. The windows to the world had opened a little.

More importantly, border controls were relaxed. This meant that Jews and political "enemies of the state" could more easily slip abroad. Or at least they could persuade a foreign sports-lover to take some valuables abroad for them. Under Nazi law, refugees could take no money or possessions with them to help them start a new life.

It is impossible to tell how extensive all this was. It was not a time to ask questions or to write diaries or letters, let alone conduct surveys. The Olympic respite certainly helped my family and me. We got out within weeks after the event, although I was close to draft age.

Again, Moscow in 1980 is not Berlin in 1936. Yet, the presence of some 100,000 foreigners, no matter how closely watched, cannot fail to have a liberalizing impact on life in the Soviet capital. Perhaps an American boycott of the Moscow Olympics will chastise the men in the Kremlin. I am afraid it will also punish the Russian people, who were never asked about Afghanistan.

Recipe for disaster

THE VANCOUVER SUN

Granted, any decision by the provincial government on Sunday shopping would have been controversial. But that is no excuse for the cop-out that manifested itself last week in the shape of the Holiday Shopping Act.

All this legislation ensures is a transference of the heat and responsibility from Victoria to municipalities who for the most part didn't want it or deserve it and, in the position they now find themselves, won't be able to control it.

By refusing to take a stand, and allowing communities to do their own thing by putting their own bylaws to a vote of the people, Attorney-General Allan Williams has effectively placed every Sunday and statutory holiday of the year — New Year's Day, Good Friday, Victoria Day, Dominion Day, B.C. Day, Labor Day, Thanksgiving Day, Remembrance Day, Christmas Day, and Boxing Day — on the auction bloc.

Having voters decide what businesses can stay open, what they can sell, and what hours they keep is a recipe for disaster.

Some municipalities will want it, others won't. Those that don't will be encouraged to change their minds in a hurry of they see business being siphoned off. When that happens, as it surely will, what guarantee is there that the citizens will either share the same concerns or want to reverse themselves? If enough of them believed strongly in the sanctity of the Sabbath or any one or more of the statutory holidays, they could just as easily turn thumbs down a second time. What happens to that community then? Its leaders will be helpless to defend themselves.

The dilemma is no less acute for retail outlets or their employees. Some stores will want to open, others won't. Workers who want and expect a day or weekend of rest from their labors suddenly have no guarantee at all that the boss, reacting to opportunity or fear, won't overnight change the conditions of employment.

Mr. Williams is dead wrong when he describes the legislation as progressive. It's nothing of the kind — unless by progressive he means that things will get progressively worse, in which case we have to agree with him.

If he considers the Holiday Shopping Act a good substitute for the "archaic, unworkable, and unenforceable" Lord's Day Act he must have had his blinds drawn for a long time.

In a situation crying out for a uniform, province-wide set of rules, we have been guaranteed nothing save the certainty of what the law of the jungle brings to society.

Mr. Williams and his cabinet colleagues may consider their approach flexible. We consider it inexcusable. Mr. Williams should withdraw his bill and draft another that is acceptable.

On little muggers' feet

Russell Baker

NEW YORK — Maestro, may I have a little overwrought prose, please, to hymn the arrival of spring?

Gladly. Spring slouches through the startled city like a harlot painted in daffodil yellow and fluorescent green with a nest of cardinals tangled in her hair and a sprig of cherry blossoms dangling from her purse.

Very fruity, and all very well if you are hymning the verbal splendors of London or Washington, but hardly applicable to New York, maestro. Will you strum the lyre again, please, and tune your song to spring in Manhattan?

I sing of spring in the city of iron and rock where no lilacs breed out of the dead season and the pigeons return not from Capistrano, nor even from Puerto Rico, such return being unnecessary since the pigeons winter right here in town. I sing of spring in the porn shops of 42d Street where procurers last in the dooryard bloomed. I sing of . . .

Could you make it a little more upbeat, maestro?

Men have cried, "In this place there is no spring," and wouldn'st their winter garments of repentance fling . . .

"Wouldn'st"? Really, maestro.

You want the hymn, buddy, or you want to quibble about poetic license?

Proceed, proceed.

But unto these doubters of fair spring's delight, I cried out, "Hah! No spring you say? No spring in New York? No spring in Gotham? Hark, ye Gothamphobes. Is that not spring ye hear in the cry of youth sporting at softball in a concrete playground, the fence whereof beareth the device that sayeth, 'No Littering Or Spitting'?"

Are you sure you are a licenced maestro of overwrought prose?

Keep your shirt on, I'm just warming up. Listen: What is spring in New York? asked ancient Tiresias, old inquirer with blind dogs. Spring in New York, I told him, spring in New York is a plastic daffodil in a bank window. It is a sycamore tree mashed flat at the curb by a speeding truck. Spring in New York is a subway strike and a bus strike, too. Spring in New York is five million New Yorkers burning $1.30-a-gallon gasoline on a Sunday afternoon to cruise the asphalt in search of a glimpse of grass. Spring in New York is a piece of ivy at the base of a tiny tree and a sign stuck in its root saying, "This is no dog can." Spring in New York is . . .

When are you going to get to the good stuff, maestro?

Good stuff coming right up. Listen: Hast thou felt the rains of spring in New York City? Oh, you haven't? What a pity. Every Saturday buckets of rain. You'd think New York was the plain in Spain. You can't even get to the gin shop, your thirst to be quenching, without getting a famous New York spring drenching.

I don't want to hear about the filthy rain. I want to hear about the beauties of New York in spring. About the beautiful daffodils behind the fence at the United Nations. About the lovely sunrise over the East River. About . . .

Go up to the UN in daffodil time, in daffodil time, and look through the iron fence. What paradise within! Such a cloud of yellow daffodils you want to walk right in and picnic on the greensward. Alas, alas, you may not except you be licenced by the UN therein to tread, in which case you probably enjoy diplomatic immunity from the U.S. and New York income taxes and can, therefore, afford to limousine over to the Plaza for a springtime martini and a dance or two, which is better vernal sport than lying on the greensward.

Maestro, if you had any pride you would smash your lyre and give up your membership in the Overwrought Prose Union.

What's a matter, buddy? Don't you love New York?

Anybody that says I don't love New York wouldn't clean up after his dog.

I love New York twice as much as you do.

Oh yeah? Prove it.

Sure. Listen to this: It's spring in New York. Spring! In the city of the big strikes. The spring comes on little mugger's feet and lovers stroll along old Delancey Street to watch the moon rise over the tree that grows in Brooklyn, while a ferry, its lights glistening like fireflies over Staten Island, carries a million dreams to every street corner from the Great White Way to Mott Street, and tell me, friend, wot street compares with Mott Street in the Spring?

In July, you imbecile. July. Your dithyramb isn't about spring. It could just as well be about winter, or fall, or July.

Did I really commit a dithyramb?

Oh, shut up!

Long-range traffic plan sought

Victoria will establish a traffic task force to come up with a long-term plan for the city's street network.

The suggestion of Ald. John Cooper was endorsed Tuesday by city council's traffic and highway planning committee.

Cooper said the city's approach to traffic planning in the 1970s was merely to respond to increasing accidents, traffic volume and new development.

The alderman said the city must step back and take a long-range view of the situation.

A memo from city engineer John Sansom to the committee said that during the 1970s there were at least 40 traffic reports.

"Few of the recommendations of these reports have been acted on. Thus, we have a situation in which the street system is fast reaching its capacity."

Cooper said the task force would be composed of members of his own traffic advisory subcommittee — which has representatives from the transportation industry — and the advisory planning commission with its neighborhood representatives, council members and developers.

It's to meet by the end of next month to establish its strategy and to determine what technical data it will require.

The city engineer said Victoria can live with its nearly saturated street system for now by reducing on-street parking, widening streets where possible and building more parking lots.

"But there are finite limits to these solutions, both physically and economically.

"What we need then is an over-all long-term traffic plan which defines and recognizes the limits and establishes a system that is sufficiently flexible to adapt to the changes in modes of transportation, social habits, developments, etc.

Inquiry seeks to avert strike

Negotiators for Greater Victoria policemen are conducting an inquiry to determine if there are any alternatives to a strike vote in their contract dispute, a union spokesman said today.

Bryan Bailey, chairman of the Joint Council for Police Negotiations, said the study likely will be complete by the end of the week with a general membership meeting held next week.

Mediator Bob Almgren met Monday with the policemen and the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association but talks bogged down after three hours over the issue of standardizing the four area contracts.

Bailey said Tuesday an early reading indicates the membership is not interested in any route other than a strike vote.

The 300 Victoria, Saanich, Oak Bay and Esquimalt policemen are bargaining for the first time as a group with the GVLRA.

Bailey says their first concern is finding out what cost items contained in some of the contracts the GVLRA would be willing to include in any standardized agreement.

The policemen want that issue settled before going on to discuss the 1980 contract.

The GVLRA says the policemen want the most costly items from the four contracts included in the umbrella agreement and that it is unrealistic to discuss such a cost package prior to knowing what the 1980 demands will be.

The parties met only twice during the negotiation stage and Monday's meeting was the first with the mediator.

The policemen's contracts expired Dec. 31, 1979.

Minor earthquake woke Victorians

Some Greater Victoria residents felt a minor earthquake as they got up for work this morning.

Seismologists at Pacific Geoscience Centre said the shock at 6.47 a.m. measured 3.5 on the Richter scale and had its source in the Puget Sound area, under Pt. Townsend, Wash.

Physicist Gary Rogers said the quake was typical of the kind recorded here and was probably caused by a movement under the Juan de Fuca plate which forms part of the earth's crust.

Rogers is one of three Victoria scientists who will present earthquake research papers at an April 23-25 meeting of the Seismological Society of America in Seattle.

Rogers will describe earthquakes in the coast region and how they relate to moverment of the Juan de Fuca plate while Pacific Geoscience Centre physicists William Milne and Dieter Weichert will speak on earthquake risk in Canada and calculating techniques.

UVic fund gets two on board

Former University of Victoria governor Ian Stewart has been appointed with Colin Rutherford to the board of directors of the UVic Foundation which administers endowment funds.

Stewart, a Victoria lawyer and University of B.C. graduate, left the UVic board of governors when he was named recently to the Universities Council of B.C.

Rutherford is an investment counsellor for the firm of A.E. Ames and Co. in Victoria.

The foundation has assets of $5.5 million.

Dying council to be revived

The moribund Community Council is to be revived later this month to act as a municipal co-ordinator for social services and to channel efforts to help the so-called street kids in downtown Victoria.

Ald. Gretchen Brewin outlined the plan before the intermunicipal committee Tuesday.

The council has been largely dormant since the early 1970s when the province took over some social services, like the Children's Aid Society.

At its annual general meeting April 29, it will be reactivated with a new board of directors, she said.

"There's some confidence that this will get going with some vitality and a new mandate."

She said it will have representatives from all the local social agencies and the municipal councils. The ministry of human resources has been active in the planning and it's hoped the province will agree to major funding once it is established.

Ald. Ron McKenzie of Victoria, who has been in on the planning, said a rough first-year budget of about $75,000 has been worked out for the new council.

Ald. Brewin said the annual meeting of the council where the first steps will be taken to revive it is to be held at the CNIB building, Fisgard and Blanshard, at 7:30 p.m. April 29.

Music store plans for church okayed

Plans by Nelson's Music store to renovate the old Baptist church at Quadra and Mason in Victoria were approved Tuesday by city council's land use planning committee.

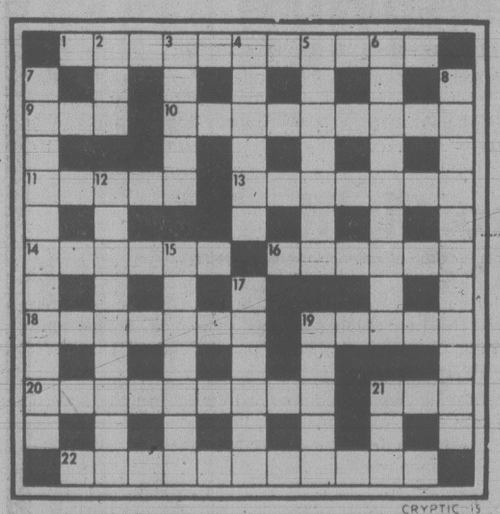

They gave the firm a major concession — no parking spaces would be required — although the zoning ordinarily would demand 67 slots for a development of that size.

That has been the major roadblock to reusing the imposing old church, which has been vacant since 1978.

Ken Nelson, the proprietor of the store, said he runs a family-oriented business that will not generate a lot of traffic in the area. The neighbors are in favor of the project, he said.

His firm would use the old church for its retail business and storage of musical instruments.

The committee approved Nelson's application for a development permit to renovate the church, provided use of the building is limited to the hours between 7 a.m. and 10 p.m. and the owners restore the crumbling front of the building.

British Columbia Buildings Corporation

FIRE PREVENTION COORDINATOR

Location: Victoria, B.C.

The Fire Prevention Coordinator is accountable for the development, and implementation of efficient cost effective fire protection measures, and for providing technical assistance and advice to all levels of the Corporation's Management.

The successful candidate acts as a staff advisor to Building Managers on all aspects of fire alarms, fire detection and Corporation supplied fire equipment and acts as Corporation's spokesman with local fire authorities and the Fire Commissioner's office. The incumbent will provide leadership in the development and implementation of fire prevention programs involving all Corporation personnel. The incumbent should be active in the British Columbia Fire Chiefs' Association, the British Columbia Fire Prevention Officers' Association and other fire services organizations which will enable him/her to continue personal liaison with Provincial and Local authorities on behalf of the Corporation.

The successful candidate should have a grade 12 education and considerable experience in fire fighting and in fire prevention. The incumbent must have an excellent knowledge of, and extensive experience in administering the British Columbia Fire Services Act, the Building Regulations of British Columbia as well as a thorough knowledge of the latest developments in fire detection and alarm equipment. Must be able to communicate effectively in both the verbal and written media, including ability to implement and conduct training programs. The incumbent must be prepared to travel extensively throughout the province.

Salary will be commensurate with qualifications and experience. Relocation assistance will be available if necessary. This position also carries with it an attractive benefits package.

Resumes should be sent in confidence, stating salary expectations, to: Mr. Jim Harrison, 400-910 Government Street, Victoria, B.C. V8W 2T4

Vander Zalm wants Que. to stay

By JAKE BANKY

The Socred who once said he wouldn't lose any sleep if Quebec separated from Canada now hopes the people of that province vote no in their May 20 referendum.

"I hope the country stays together," Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm said Tuesday.

When the separatist Parti Quebecois was elected back in November, 1976, Vander Zalm made headlines across Canada when he said if Quebec pulled out, Canadians would no longer have to pay extra for French labelling on their corn flakes boxes.

"I don't think it matters much," he said at the time.

"I don't think the people, frankly, are all that concerned about what happens in Quebec."

But now that a referendum date has been set, Vander Zalm has changed his tune, calling for a strong vote against any form of separation.

However, he still feels there should be no special deals for Quebec if it stays in confederation.

"Canada is one country and all the people should be treated equally regardless of where they live. There should be no special deals for anyone simply because they happen to be of a particular ethnic origin."

Vander Zalm said he does not intend to take an active role campaigning on behalf of a united Canada.

"It's not my place to be involved over there," he said.

Premier Bill Bennett also said he has no plans to campaign in Quebec because he will be too busy with the legislative session in Victoria.

"I will try to continue to make what I believe to be positive, constructive comment on how we can build the country and better govern it in the future, not only for Quebec but for the west as well," Bennett said.

The premier welcomed the setting of a referendum date after the years of talking.

"I think the country would like to see the people of Quebec dispose of the issue."

If Quebec should vote to separate, Bennett believes — as does Premier Peter Lougheed of Alberta — that it should be treated as a completely separate country.

That is a position agreed on by all four western premiers, he said.

Tourism rap rejected

The B.C. tourism ministry has embarked on long-range planning and currently is enjoying phenomenal increases in the number of visitors to the province, Tourism Minister Pat Jordan said Tuesday.

Mrs. Jordan said the future of the industry is bright and she rejected criticisms contained in a report on the industry which says it is being hampered by poor planning and low-quality accommodation and services.

The report, prepared by three consulting firms, says the B.C. government has bounced the tourism portfolio from ministry to ministry, deprived it of staff and had it concentrate mostly on research, marketing and promotion while neglecting long-term planning and development.

The report says that outside the southwestern corner of B.C., most of the accommodation base can best be described as fragmented, unorganized and substandard in relation to other competing areas of North America.

Mrs. Jordan declined to say if she has read the report, which has not officially been released.

However, she said the government has recognized the need for long-range planning and took the first step last year by establishing a separate portfolio.

"What I think is important here is that B.C.'s tourism industry in the last five years has grown more substantially in terms of its attraction to tourists than anywhere else in Canada."

The minister backed that up by producing figures compiled for Tourism B.C. which show that entries by U.S. vehicles at border crossings increased 36 per cent in February from the same month last year.

The consultants' report says that if tourism, touted as B.C.'s third industry after forestry and mining, is to keep growing, the current emphasis on the automobile-oriented traveller will have to change.

Mair backpedalling on fluoridation issue

Health Minister Rafe Mair is backpedalling from any suggestion that he is urging general fluoridation of drinking water in British Columbia.

At the same time he says his staff informs him that dental costs in the province would be about half of what they now are if there were universal fluoridation.

"Personally I think the evidence is very much in favor of fluoridation being a major way that we can cut down on dental costs," Mair said Tuesday.

"However, fluoridation is brought in on a local option basis and it is not for me to decide but for the people in each area to decide."

Even with a government denticare program to be introduced this year, Mair steers away from the controversial issue. He said he hopes, through the educational program that will be part of denticare, people will become convinced fluoridation is a good idea.

"But we certainly are not about to force things on people against their will."

Mair disagreed with the suggestion that it is time for the government to deal with an issue that has been unresolved for decades.

"It has been left up to the people of British Columbia on a local option basis and I think that's still a pretty good way of doing things."

The minister said he will not press municipalities to hold referendums on fluoridation. "But I certainly will encourage people to look carefully at the issue because I think if they do they will realize it will do a great deal to reduce health costs with no adverse effects."

Life sentence

TOKYO (AP) — Tokyo district court sentenced a retired army general to life in prison and gave lesser terms to two other officers who on March 17 pleaded guilty to passing military secrets to the Soviet Union last year.

Poultry pitch made to public

VANCOUVER (CP) — The United States-owned Cargill Grain Co. Ltd., British Columbia's largest poultry processor, is making a bid for public support in its battle to acquire Maplewood Poultry Processors' Ltd.

Cargill, which owns Panco Poultry Ltd., in an open letter to poultry producers, consumers and retailers, accuses the provincial government of being more concerned with its political image than with major problems facing the poultry processing industry.

The company said in a newspaper advertisement published today the transition is necessary to ensure the continued operation of both firms yet the government has reversed its position for a third time and will oppose the purchase before the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

"It seems clear the provincial government has responded more to political pressures than to the serious economic plight of the poultry industry in the province, and in turn therefore, the future of the poultry producers," the firm says.

Cargill notes that one firm already has gone into receivership and Maplewood has issued layoff notices.

It says it planned to convert the Panco operation, which it bought recently from the government, "to a modern, efficient turkey-processing operation with further processing of poultry, turkey and spent fowl products."

"The Maplewood plant in Clearbrook would have been modernized into an efficient, specialized, fryer plant."

Now, the Maplewood plant will close and Panco will get out of the turkey and spent fowl processing to deal only with the fryer market.

The acquisition was opposed by the New Democratic Party which said the combined operation then would control 35 per cent of the poultry business and about 65 per cent of the turkey business in B.C.

Cargill said it shared in the concern and had approached the Turkey Marketing Board for a reduction to 50 per cent of the turkey market.

Meanwhile, the B.C. Federation of Labor has asked the provincial government to save 135 jobs at Maplewood even if that means reversing government opposition to Cargill's purchase bid.

Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt's first priority must be to save the jobs, federation president Jim Kinnaird said in a telegram to Hewitt.

"The most preferable to us would see the provincial government offer financial assistance either through low-interest loans or grants to a Canadian company or co-op to purchase the plant," Kinnaird said in a news release.

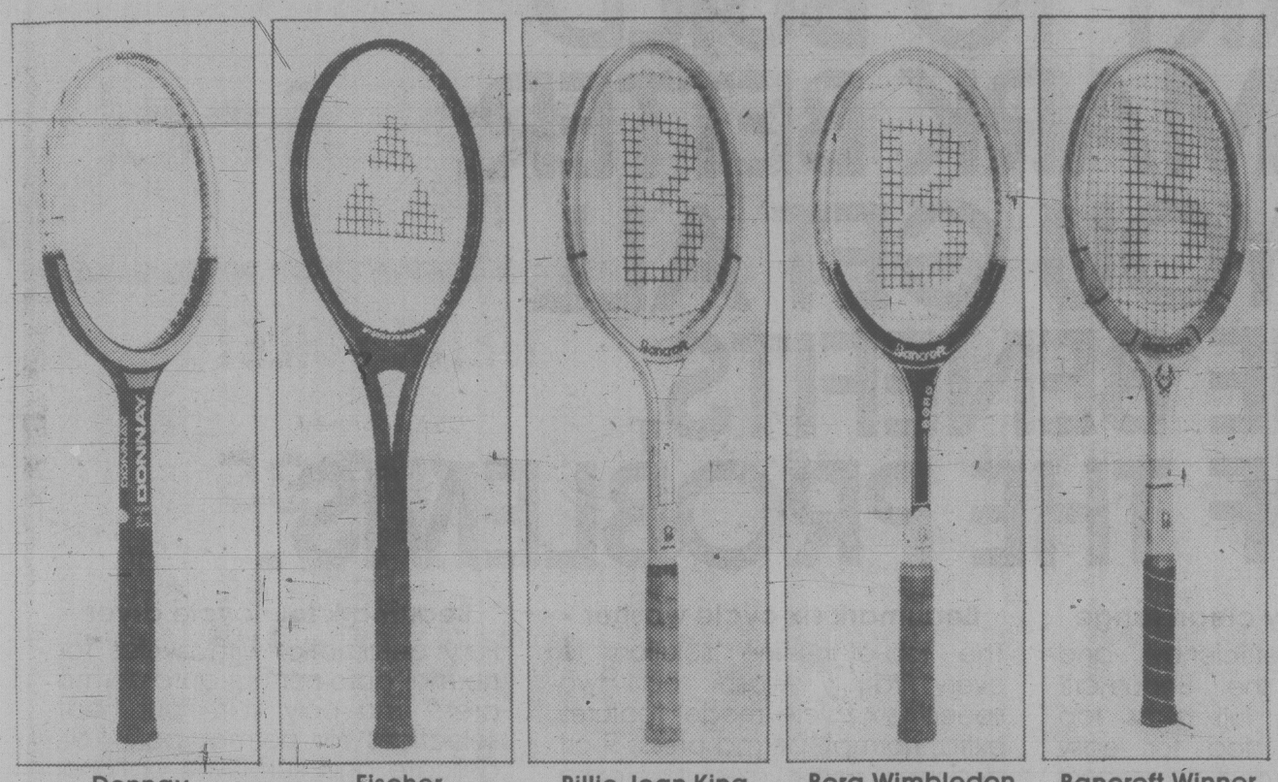

"The other alternative is for the government to step aside and not block the attempt of an American company to purchase the poultry operation."

Adjournment delay again as charges of laziness fly

The NDP held up adjournment of the house for the second week in a row Tuesday by debating for more than an hour a government motion to adjourn to Wednesday, ruling out a night sitting.

Several NDP members who said they had been informed by Government whip George Mussallem that there would be a sitting Tuesday night, accused the government of being lazy for not scheduling night sittings for the past three weeks.

Night sittings traditionally are held from 8:30 p.m. to 11 p.m. two nights a week.

Charles Barber (NDP — Victoria) said there are two possible motives behind the government's refusal to work night sittings.

"Either they're afraid of losing a vote or they're lazy," he said.

Last month, the NDP called a vote immediately after the house began a night sitting, trying to catch some government members returning late from dinner.

NDP House leader Frank Howard said the government is negative to the idea of work and the concept of night sittings.

"The only thing that it's positive to in this regard is that it's positive to the casual life," he said.

"We could be here this evening working for the general public of this province. Here's a government that has got all the characteristics and all the mobility and all the speed of a receding glacier when it comes to public business."

Bill King (NDP — Shuswap-Revelstoke) said that because the government is recessing the house for three days next week so Premier Bill Bennett and some of his cabinet ministers can attend the Western premier's conference in Lethbridge, it should hold night sittings this week.

"I have never seen such a shambles in terms of an excuse for an administration in all of my life," he said.

"No direction, no answers, no accountability from the first minister (referring to Bennett's refusal to answer questions put to him during debates on his estimates)."

Intergovernmental Relations Minister Garde Gardom, the Social Credit house leader, said the NDP knows government members are working during the night and was just engaging in flim flam.

Gardom said the move to hold up adjournment was just a political ploy.

Refugees rescued

MANILA (AP) — An American patrol plane guided a commercial ship to rescue 24 Vietnamese refugees from a 13-metre wooden fishing boat in the South China Sea, officials at the U.S. Subic Naval Base said.

School for deaf gets study

A central school for deaf students is the subject of a study to be conducted by a seven-member committee appointed by Education Minister Brian Smith.

The committee will report to Smith at the end of August on the best location for a school and on the programs it should carry.

The ministry operates Jericho Hill School for the Deaf in Vancouver.

"I want to know if Jericho is the best facility to meet the needs of deaf children or whether we should consider replacing it," Smith said.

Anyone interested in presenting opinions to the committee should forward briefs to the committee through the education ministry, 7451 Elmbridge Way, Richmond, V6X 1B8.

Pension move draws praise from Brown

Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy Tuesday won applause from her severest critic — Burnaby-Edmonds NDP MLA Rosemary Brown — when she promised B.C. will pass on the full $35 increase in the federal guarantee for old age pensioners.

Brown congratulated the minister on her decision.

"It is the intention of my government to pass along the federal increase to senior citizens in B.C. as we have always done in the past," McCarthy told the legislature.

"This will be achieved by increasing the provincial guarantee level to accommodate the $35 increase to the federal Guaranteed Income Supplement, when it occurs."

BROWN
... lauds McCarthy

The minister said she was making the announcement in order to allay fears that the increase, announced in the federal throne speech, might not be passed along in full.

"My office receives many letters of concern from senior citizens and from anxious and concerned families every time there's a change in the payments announced," she said.

Voting today on ferry pact

SEATTLE (AP) — A tentative agreement was reached Tuesday afternoon in a strike which has shut down the nation's largest ferry system for 11 days, Washington state ferry officials said.

No details of the tentative pact were immediately released. The agreement was hammered out during a brief meeting Tuesday afternoon.

Ferry service could resume tonight if the contract were ratified, but not in time for the evening commuter rush, said ferry service spokesman Alice Collingwood.

Union members will meet to vote on the pact this afternoon, she said. Getting the system operating again would take four to six hours.

The tentative settlement also assures that longshoremen in northwest Washington, who walked off their jobs Tuesday in support of the ferry workers, will be back at work, ferry officials said.

A sensitive issue was reported to be the question of amnesty for the striking union and its leaders, White said. Collingwood would not say if the agreement provided amnesty.

All sins will be forgiven

This is moving month at the library and if those long-overdue books are weighing heavily on your conscience don't worry. You can return them later

Moving 200,000 books is a voluminous business, to say the least, but they'll be in place by May 2

By NORMAN GIDNEY

People are so eager to get into their new downtown library they're already returning borrowed books to the new address even though it won't be open until May 2.

Library director Don Miller says the library's books are turning up there and everywhere else, even the Vancouver Island regional library branches in Colwood and Sidney.

There's no hurry if you borrowed a book before the closure and the due date is before May 2.

The library has declared an amnesty for one month following the opening of the new quarters.

"All sins forgiven — no questions asked," said Miller

Any book can be returned no matter how long ago it was borrowed and overdue fines won't be charged. Children's books are normally exempt from overdue fines.

If you must get the book back, turn it in at any of the Greater Victoria library's branches in Oak Bay, Esquimalt or Saanich.

But the wait for the new downtown library should be worth it.

Regular patrons of the grubby, rundown old library at Yates and Blanshard will marvel at the wall-to-wall carpeting, polished brass handrails and new furniture.

The library has most of the main floor and part of the second in the provincial government's Waddington building in the 700 block Broughton. The red brick and glass building is spacious and airy.

The main entrance to the library is off a central courtyard which features a three-storey high stainless steel sculpture.

Ceiling-to-floor glass admits plenty of light and there's room to browse the shelves without having to squeeze flat against the stacks to let someone pass, like the old library.

"In the old Carnegie building, if the fumes from the men's john didn't get you, the noise and the dirt would," is Miller's unsentimental description of the library's home for the last 75 years.

The new library has double the public space of the old.

More of the library's collection of 200,000 books will be on the shelves. In the old, many books were stored away in the stacks, accessible only to the staff and borrowers who made a specific request after searching the card catalogue.

"It's a bit chaotic down here," Miller said in an interview conducted amidst the controlled pandemonium of moving and unpacking.

Close to three miles of books stacked as they are on a library shelf have to be transferred.

There are 10,000 records and tape cassettes and 1,000 films to be moved as well.

"It's such a vast improvement," Miller said as he walked a reporter through the new library.

With more of its books on public display, the library expects greater use of the collection.

Besides more space, there are several new features. Carrels — small study areas — have been provided for students and researchers who want to get away from distractions.

There won't be a separate reference room. Many of the reference books formerly confined to the old library's second-floor reference room will be interfiled with the general collection according to subject matter.

You still won't be able to take them out, but they'll be easier to use.

New chairs and coffee table-style furniture will replace the hard wooden chairs and long reading room tables. But there won't be any comfortable couches or easy chairs such as the first floor lounge of the old Carnegie had. Miller said some patrons tended to nod off to sleep in them.

The organization of the new space has history, fiction, the arts, the youth section and periodicals on the main floor with the lesser-used books on science, pure and applied, the social sciences, religion, philosophy and business on the second floor.

The main entrance is dominated by two long counters. On the left side as you enter is the information centre, a sort of ready reference desk to answer questions quickly.

"I think this will really be the key to the library," said Miller.

The library's collection of files on different clubs and organizations in the Victoria area will be located here and the dozens of world telephone books will be handy.

On the right side will be the book return and checkout counter. The configuration also provides a small display area near the front door, about the size of the lounge in the old library, with panels for pinning up posters.

Fixed link derby draws a new entry

Another entry has surfaced in the unofficial Great Fixed-Link Sweepstakes.

The latest proposal, prepared by a Victoria-based consortium of engineers, is for a floating highway between Vancouver Island and the mainland.

The consortium is made up of Hatch Associates, De Leuw Cather Canada, Monenco Consultants Pacific, Hay and Anderson International and Willis, Cunliffe, Tait.

Science Minister Pat McGeer, who received the proposal Tuesday, said he will add it to the others he is putting before his cabinet colleagues.

Cabinet has yet to decide whether to approve a $500,000 to $1 million feasibility study on the basic idea of a fixed link.

The latest proposal calls for a floating, six-lane highway across Georgia Strait, anchored by cables to the sea bed.

There would also be a special lane for bicycle traffic, turnaround areas for cars, parking areas, small marinas, container port facilities, shops and other service outlets spotted along the route.

Railway rapid transit service would be provided in a channel suspended beneath the floating highway.

Small boats would be able to pass under bridge sections. For large ships, floating sections would be submerged at intervals.

Cost of the entire project is estimated in the $2.4 billion range.

Victoria developer and former Socred cabinet minister Sam Bawlf said high tolls would prevent Vancouver Island from becoming a dormitory.

Cheap shots in Saanich

If you want cheap drinks, head out to Saanich.

Mayor Mel Couvelier told the intermunicipal committee Tuesday that Saanich's recreational facilities charge low prices for beer and hard liquor.

Beer just recently went up to $1 a bottle and liquor to $1.25 a drink, which is considerably under the market, the mayor said.

He wanted his colleagues in Victoria, Oak Bay and Esquimalt to get together and set common prices.

Victoria's assistant city manager, Colin Crisp, said he will ask the intermunicipal recreation committee of administrators and managers to examine the issue and report back to the politicians.

Tillicum switch touches off spate of emergency talks

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Greater Victoria merchants, developers and politicians will hold a series of meetings this week to discuss a Saanich decision to let developers almost double the size of Tillicum shopping centre.

The Victoria business community is planning an emergency meeting at city hall Friday morning.

Broadmead Farms Ltd. executives also will meet this week to assess the impact the Tillicum increase will have on its plans for a similar development in Royal Oak.

The matter was a last-minute addition to a Capital Region District planning committee meeting today.

And Victoria Ald. Ron McKenzie is suggesting provincial legislation to limit the size of regional shopping centres.

He said Nova Scotia last fall enacted a law resricting them to 75,000 square feet.

"I'm sure (Bill) Vander Zalm is looking at it," he said, referring to the minister of municipal affairs.

Downtown Victoria Association president Philip Holmes said his group is not concerned about the Tillicum shopping centre as such.

But the DVA is worried that Tillicum will complete a triangular complex of development, including Mayfair and Town and Country shopping centres, that will create a whole new downtown outside Victoria.

CRD director Howard Drummond said Western Community representatives are determined to find a legal way to block the Tillicum addition.

They believe the expanded centre will have an adverse effect on a regional shopping centre that will be built this summer on Jacklin Road in Langford, Colwood director Drummond said.

Drummond and CRD chairman James Campbell said Saanich acted in bad faith.

A Saanich promise to restrict the size of the Tillicum development was one reason the regional board dropped a lawsuit against the municipality over the hotly-contested development.

The other reason was a promise to refer plans for future shopping centres to the regional board for approval.

Saanich council Monday removed a restrictive covenant limiting the size of the Tillicum development to 295,000 square feet.

Tillicum developers Cal Investments Ltd. will add 200,000 square feet, making the Tillicum centre the largest on southern Vancouver Island.

Eatons said Monday it will open a store in the Tillicum centre and at the same time announced a three-year, $4 million renovation and expansion project for its downtown store.

Broadmead spokesman Merv Mawson said Tuesday the company is not ready to discuss the situation but will make a statement Friday.

A rezoning application for the 174,000-square-foot Broadmead Village will go to public hearing April 29. Broadmead has been working on development plans since since 1970.

At one point the two developers were competing with each other, but Broadmead fell behind because of strong public opposition to its plan for a 229,000-square-foot complex.

Broadmead's revised application is now to rezone 16 acres instead of the entire 35-acre site between Royal Oak Drive and Royal Oak Avenue east of Pat Bay Highway.

The company's partner, The Bay, plans to open a department store in the complex if rezoning is approved.

Saanich Ald. Irene Block, who voted in favor of the Tillicum addition, said Tuesday she doesn't believe the municipality needs two shopping centres.

"We passed Tillicum, so why not allow Eatons in, too?" Block said. "Why not make it as big and productive as you can?"

Block said the Broadmead proposal would take business from local merchants.

The Jacklin shopping centre will not be affected by Tillicum, according to Block, because it will offer different services.

Ask the Times

Q. I would like to know who the mining town of Stewart was named after D.A.

A. Stewart was established in 1899 by gold seekers who did not go to the Yukon. It was named after Robert M. Stewart, first mining recorder for the area. The village was incorporated in 1930.

Only businessmen heard as Centre foes squelched

By NORMAN GIDNEY

Opponents of the waterfront convention centre were squelched Tuesday night when the Advisory Planning Commission strictly interpreted the rules to favor downtown business spokesmen who showered the project with near-unanimous praise.

A dozen downtown Victoria property owners and merchants "having an interest in property" within a block of the Inner Harbor commercial zone were allowed to speak. That phrase became the key issue when several neighborhood activists were not allowed the same privilege.

APC chairman Jim Cosh said being a taxpayer, and thus an indirect part-owner of public property in the zone, did not constitute having an interest and they therefore couldn't speak.

Several people claimed that as citizens they own part of the public causeway in front of the Empress Hotel, which is part of the harbor commercial zoning to be amended to allow public buildings, including a convention centre.

BALL
. . . legal recourse?

"Don't make a mockery of a public hearing," yelled one man as Charles Ball of the James Bay Residents' League attempted to gain the floor this way.

Cosh said he would be pleased to hear from aldermen or MLAs regarding the convention centre and the zoning change but not from ordinary taxpayers.

Anyone in the city can have his say when council holds a public hearing later, he added.

Ald. Robin Blencoe interjected that under city bylaws, the APC had no authority to restrict speakers.

He said its monthly open meetings were technically illegal as city council hadn't passed the necessary bylaw amendment.

"That means you hear from everybody or you hear from nobody," Blencoe said.

Cosh told him and other protestors that the APC was only acting on instructions of council and that was the place to argue the rights and wrongs of the rule on who may speak.

Ball said the JBRL will consider legal action to attack the procedure.

The protestors were also angry that Cosh allowed Philip Holmes to speak, although he has no direct interest in property within a block of the affected harbor zone.

Holmes, a realtor and president of the Downtown Victoria Association, has his business at the corner of Government and Broughton, two blocks from the harbor.

Besides Holmes, a dozen other downtown businessmen expressed their opinions on the convention centre.

Except for a resident of the Harbor Square condominiums on Government who worried about the project blocking the harbor view, all urged the government to get on with it.

They ranged from David Krenbrink, representing the owners of the Surfside Cabaret at 1208 Wharf, to George Woods who has a sailing school at 1010 Wharf and a representative of the Army, Navy and Air Force veterans association who own land at Wharf and Courtney.

Les Wood, newly-elected president of the Visitors Information Centre and manager of the Undersea Gardens, both in the harbor zone, said the waterfront area will die unless there are attractions like the convention centre to bring people into the area.

Architect Nick Bawlf, brother of Sam Bawlf who got the project going two years ago when he was still a cabinet minister, said he has been closely involved with redevelopment of Old Town and Wharf Street for 18 years.

"The only way to succeed in reviving the area is with a people generator," he said.

"I don't think a park or a parking lot on that site is going to achieve that."

Restaurateur Pierre Mercier, owner of Chez Pierre at 522 Yates, said in a letter to the commission: "One more park will attract the kind of citizens we are trying to get rid of."

Bastion Square retailer Jim Bennett, president of the Old Town merchants association, said after reading Mercier's letter: "Let's get on with it. Let's not delay it any longer than we have."

One member of the APC was upset at Cosh's ruling disallowing the protestors.

Ald. John Cooper, who sits on the APC with Mayor Bill Tindall and aldermen Bob Wright, Bill McElroy, Ken Sinclair and Ron McKenzie, said another half-hour would have been sufficient to hear everybody who wanted to speak.

The first hour was taken up with other APC business.

"All that we've accomplished here tonight is we've sent an awful number of people home frustrated and angry," Cooper said.

Tracy's learning how to handle celebrity status

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. — Here she comes, the No. 1 player in women's tennis, decked out in high heels, long hair, makeup, designer clothes and a fur jacket.

"Hey, that's Tracy Austin," an admiring teen-ager boasts to a group of male friends.

"That's not Tracy Austin," replies another. "That's a fox."

Miss Austin smiled when the episode at New York's Madison Square Garden was recounted the other day. "They didn't really say that, did they?" she said, turning to her mother, who was sipping some red wine in the living room of their fourth-floor villa overlooking the Sea Pines Racquet Club.

"They meant it as a compliment," Jeanne Austin told her daughter. Robert Lansdorp, her coach, nodded.

Miss Austin, 17, is smiling more these days, and not simply because the braces are off or because she has replaced Martina Navratilova at the top of the computer rankings of the Women's Tennis Association. After three years of apologizing for her youth and talent, Miss Austin, has found a comfort zone on the women's tour.

"O.K., Tracy, who's the boyfriend now?" Chris Evert Lloyd teased recently, remembering that she was at the same age when her first serious romance, with Jimmy Connors, blossomed.

Miss Austin's initiation was especially noticable during the $150,000 Family Circle Cup. While winning her first major title here last year, she was uncertain how to react to people and what was expected of her. Yet even with a newly-achieved No. 1 ranking, and Sunday's three-set victory here over Regina Marsikova, she has been relaxed, socializing, gossiping, signing autographs and chasing alligators with Bettina Bunge, 16, a player and close friend.

TRACY AUSTIN . . . now able to relax

"I'm laughing a lot more because I'm more comfortable," she said, twirling one of her pigtails.

Off the court, she still is more girl than young woman, content with the quarter-pounder at McDonald's rather than continental cuisine. She is starting to evaluate people — who she likes, who she doesn't and why — but defers most decisions to her mother. She even phones her older brother, Jeff, on major problems. "He's so logical and not biased, and he was a player also," she said.

The youthful curiosity remains. "Tracy is unbelievably inquisitive," says Lee Jackson of Bronxville, N.Y., the tour referee. "She'll ask a question, you give the answer and then she'll still ask why." Billie Jean King calls Miss Austin "Why."

On the court, however, Miss Austin has the answers. "Her own view of herself is very realistic," says Lindsey Beaven, director of the Avon winter tour, who describes Miss Austin, the Avon champion, as "progressing steadily as player and person."

"She was shy," said Betty Stove, 34, a pro and former doubles partner, who first squelched Miss Austin's coming-out party three years ago in the United States Open championships at Forest Hills, Queens. "When you put a person in front of a firing squad after two or three years, you have to have an opinion."

Miss Austin's attention to detail is overshadowed only by her purpose. Her three-set semifinal victory over Ivanna Madruga Saturday, in a two-hour, 50-minute marathon, was another example of what Miss Stove says is "a will to stay out there and die."

This commitment has intensified with Miss Austin's rush to the top.

Lansdorp has been a positive influence for her. A sound teacher and tactician, he is the soft cushion to her disciplined demeanor that often makes court-side rituals of such routine gestures as folding a towel or hanging up a sweater.

Mother-daughter relations can sour in sports with age, but the Austins seem generally fond of each other, even if Miss Austin cannot explain precisely why it works so well.

"Tracy has a very good relation with her mother," says Trish Faulkner, another tour director. "It's something she needs, and they've handled it well."

Considered strong and fair by players and officials, Jeanne Austin, a mother of five, went to another tennis mother, Colette Evert, for some survival recipies. "When Tracy was 14, I was talking to Colette," Mrs. Austin recalled. "I said, 'How long did you travel with Chris?' She said, 'until she was 18 or 19,' I said, 'Oh, dear.'"

The Evert-Austin comparisons seem inevitable, with their Cinderella arrivals, two-handed backhands, tennis mothers, prize money and, now, number one rankings. Their games never were young, Miss Beaven observed.

"Tracy's so single-minded that she sometimes doesn't know what others are experiencing," said Miss Beaven, a former ranking player. "The same could be said of Chris at that age. Some people might say she is selfish, but I prefer single-minded."

The Austin secret is preparation, not only with the racquet, but in attitude.

"I can't recall her ever missing a practice session," Miss Beaven said. "Most players are not that disciplined, but she needs that for the way she plays ... She likes equations to work out. This and this equals this."

Miss Austin freely admits she feels as guilty about skipping her 11th-grade homework from Rolling Hills High School, at home in California, as she would about missing a practice. "If I didn't do my homework, what would I say," she shrugged. "My dog ate it?"

Soviets claim CIA sabotage

Times News Services

A Soviet newspaper today published what it called details of a CIA and FBI plot to sabotage the Moscow Olympics, including the sending of young foreign-language speakers from United States universities in an anti-Olympic subversion team to be sent to Moscow.

The article in Moskovaskaya Pravda follows repeated warnings by Soviet officials of Western ideological sabotage during the Games. Moscow's Communist party boss, Viktor V. Grishin, warned March 1 that political vigilance would be important during the Olympics.

It said that at the orders of Zbigniew Brzezinsky, U.S. national security adviser, American intelligence services are organizing "nationalist and anti-Soviet organizations of the United States, Canada and certain other countries of West Europe" for anti-Olympic purposes.

"The goal of the plan is selecting and appropriately preparing emissaries to be sent into the U.S.S.R. through tourist channels and carrying out hostile, subversive activities against athletes of five continents who will come to Moscow for the 1980 Olympics," the article said.

It said the agents included persons under 30 years of age who speak Russian or other languages of the Soviet Union, recruited from Harvard University and in Philadelphia. It said the youths were capable of conducting political discussions, presumably with Soviet citizens.

It said there were plans to hold a subversion seminar in May in Western Europe for training of the contingent and that members would be provided with subversive literature.

"American secret services, for example, have already placed their orders at certain U.S. and West European publishing houses for Olympic editions of all sorts of anti-Soviet literature, posters and handbills," the paper said.

It said other items to be produced included "all sorts of shirts, jackets, bags, raincoats, umbrellas and so forth with pictures of various renegades and traitors" — apparently a reference to Soviet dissidents.

On Tuesday, as President Carter's purposed boycott began to take shape, a senior official of the Moscow Olympic Organizing Committee said 106 countries had indicated informally they will take part in the Summer Games that open on July 19.

Vitaly Smirnov, vice-president of the organizing committee, said seven countries had turned down invitations to take part, not counting the United States.

He did not say how many of the 106 had filed formal acceptances, which must reach Moscow by May 24. A total of 143 countries have been invited to participate in the games.

Smirnov said the Moscow games would go ahead despite the U.S. boycott, which President Carter called and which the U.S. Olympic Committee has reluctantly backed to protest the Soviet presence in Afghanistan.

"We have done everything in our power to help the U.S. athletes take part," Smirvov said. "Our conscience is clear."

He said the pullout of U.S. firms involved with the Olympics, including NBC television, would not interfere with preparations or with television coverage for the rest of the world.

Cougars close in on first WHL final

The unpredictability of junior hockey tends to constrict any steady flow of luxury, but Victoria Cougar coach Jack Shupe is enjoying a double-barrelled dose of milk and honey today.

Firstly, there is sweetness in Victoria's position in the Western Hockey League playoffs. With Tuesday's 4-2 victory over Seattle Breakers and a 3-0 edge in the Western Division final, Cougars are one game away from reaching the league's championship final for the first time in their history.

They can make it by defeating the Breakers in the fourth game of the series tonight in Seattle. If Seattle can prolong the inevitable, game No. 5 in the best-of-seven series will be played in Memorial Arena on Friday.

In addition to position, Shupe also finds delight in the depth of his bench. With John Newberry, Paul Cyr and defenceman Jerry Heikkala called up from tier two ranks, the Cougars are well-stocked for playoff action with 22 bodies.

It is a luxury Shupe has never enjoyed before in almost two decades of coaching. When he piloted Medicine Hat Tigers to the Memorial Cup final in 1973, he had only 16 regulars available for duty in the Canadian championship series.

The benefits of depth came through Tuesday. With centre Mark Morrison nursing a sore heel and 62-goal scorer Greg Adams suspended, Newberry and Cyr, up from Nanaimo Clippers, filled in adequately. Cougars also lost the services of defenceman Len Dawes in the first period, but Victoria's remaining four defenders responded with a solid game.

Dawes suffered a cut above an eye when struck by a wayward stick. It was not serious and the 17-year-old rookie will play tonight if the eye is not closed by swelling.

Adams earned a one-game suspension as the result of an incident in the Cougars' 3-0 victory Sunday. Adams swung his stick at a player as he skated by the Seattle bench.

Seattle's personnel problems aren't as cheerful. Breakers played without two of their best forwards and "the rest" couldn't solve the smart netminding of Kevin Eastman or put a stopper on the power play that sparked Victoria's attack.

Cougars scored three power-play goals in the second period. That was all the offensive edge they needed as Eastman played alertly and his defence supplied strong support.

Breakers are without John Neeld, their top scorer who has been dropped for disciplinary reasons, and Joe Ward, who suffered a concussion in Sunday's game. Their absence was obviously felt.

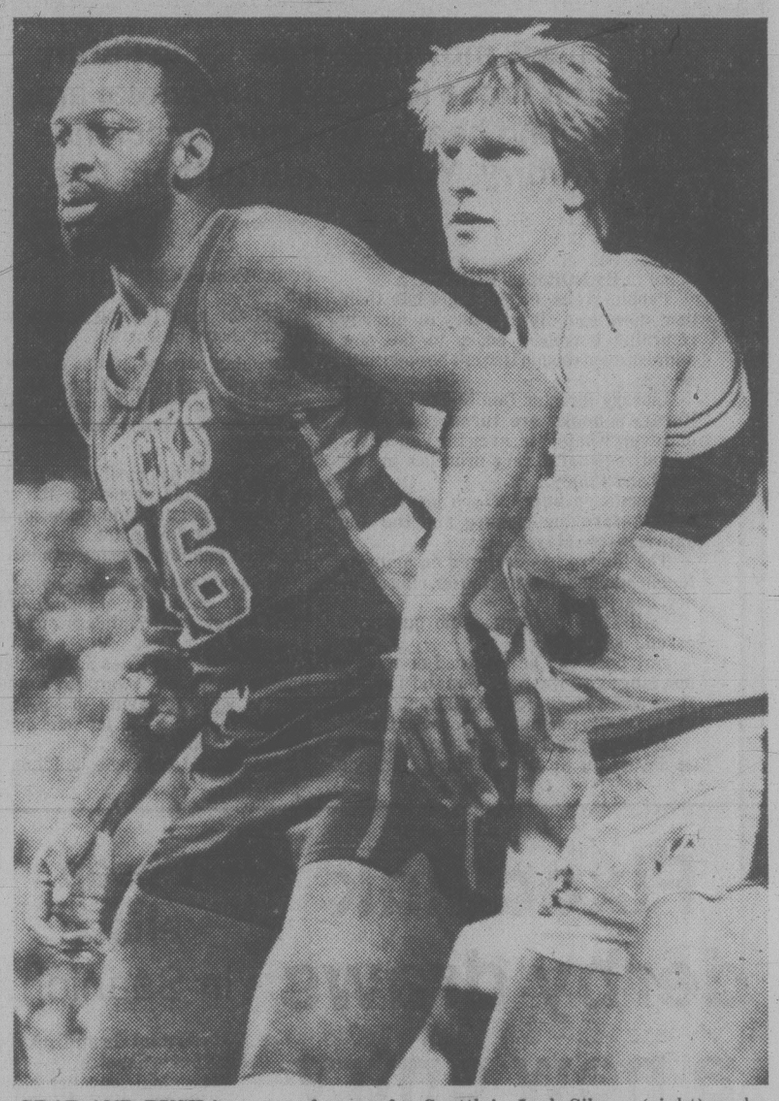

Daryl Coldwell, Barry Pederson, Bob Jansch and Brad Palmer scored the goals as Victoria recorded its fifth victory over Seattle in seven playoff games.

In the Eastern Division playoff at Regina, Regina Pats whipped Medicine Hat Tigers 9-1 in a game which produced 208 minutes of penalties after a third-period brawl.

The brawl, which delayed the game about one hour, began as a fight between two players but escalated into a bench-clearing affair. Medicine Hat was trailing 8-1 at the time.

Regina leads the series, 2-0. Game No. 3 is in Medicine Hat, Thursday.

GRAB AND PUSH is name of game for Seattle's Jack Sikma (right) as he jockeys for position with Bob Lanier of Milwaukee Bucks during National Basketball Association playoff game Tuesday in Seattle. Lanier scored 22 points as Bucks grabbed 108-97 victory for 3-2 lead in best-of-seven series.

Balance key factor in quarter-final tests

Times News Services

The National Hockey League quarter-final series this year boast the best-balanced field since the preliminary round was introduced for the 1974-75 season.

Philadelphia Flyers, regular-season over-all points champions with 116, earned 30 points more than New York Rangers, eighth over-all and the lowest-ranked quarter-final participant with 86 points.

Previously, the narrowest spread was 35 points in 1975, when Philadelphia, Buffalo Sabres and Montreal Canadiens each had 113 points and Toronto Maple Leafs were last-ranked in the quarter-finals with 78 points.

The biggest spread was 59 points in 1977 when Montreal topped the league with 132 points and St. Louis Blues, who got a bye to the quarter-final round by finishing first in the Smythe Division, were the weakest club in the round with 73 points.

This year, with no first-round byes, marks the second time that preliminary series produced no upsets. Teams with the home-ice advantage won all four opening-round series in 1976.

This also is the second year in the last six that there have been no teams with losing records in the quarter-final round. The other was 1976.

Left winger Yvon Lambert of Montreal and defenceman Ray Bourque of Boston Bruins are tied for the playoff scoring lead with eight points each. Lambert has six goals and two assists, while Bourque, a rookie, has one goal and seven assists.

Chicago Black Hawks, who swept their best-of-five preliminary series against St. Louis, have the best playoff goals-against average at 1.24. Tony Esposito has played all 193 minutes in goal for Chicago.

The best personal average is 0.50 by Bob Sauve of Buffalo. He has given up one goal in two games against Vancouver Canucks. He and Billy Smith of New York Islanders posted the only shutouts of the opening round.

Chicago has the best playoff power-play percentage, having scored three goals in eight man-advantage situations for a scoring percentage of 37.5.

Montreal has the most effective playoff penalty-killing mark.

Bucks jolt Sonics from driver's seat

By Associated Press

Philadelphia and Los Angeles have joined Boston in the conference finals of the National Basketball Association playoffs, putting the teams with the three best records during the regular season into the final four.

For the club with the fourth-best mark, defending-champion Seattle SuperSonics, the outlook is bleak.

The Sonics, playing for a crowd of 40,172 at Seattle's Kingdome, the largest crowd ever to attend a pro basketball game, were beaten by Milwaukee Bucks, 108-97, Tuesday night and now trail in the best-of-seven series 3-2. The Bucks can wrap it up at home Friday night.

The Sonics, who fell behind in the series 2-1 only to tie it at Milwaukee and thought they were in the driver's seat with two of the last three games at home, know they are in trouble.

"We had the golden opportunity, but we gave it away," said Sonics' centre Jack Sikma. "We've got to do it the hard way.

"You can't turn the clock back.

"We've just got to go out and do it on Friday."

Philadelphia and Los Angeles did it on Tuesday.

The 76ers, getting 30 points apiece from Julius Erving and Darryl Dawkins, beat Atlanta Hawks 105-100 to win their series 4-1. Philadelphia will meet the Celtics in the Eastern Conference final starting in Boston on Friday.

The Lakers, with Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scoing 35 points and grabbing 16 rebounds, whipped Phoenix Suns 126-101 to win their series, also by a 4-1 margin. The Lakers face the winner of the Milwaukee-Seattle series in the Western Conference final.

Boston had advanced to the round of four by completing a sweep of Houston Rockets on Monday.

In Seattle, the Bucks lost forward Dave Myers with a bruised knee and sixth man Junior Bridgeman with a bruised lower back, and that allowed reserve Richard Washington plenty of playing time. He responded with a season-high 21 points.

"This was the best game I've seen him play," said coach Don Nelson, "and it came at such an opportune time."

Milwaukee led 85-72 after three quarters but Seattle rallied to cut the gap to three at 92-89 with 4:19 left. But the Bucks turned back that charge by scoring six straight points, including a three-point play by Washington.

Bob Lanier of Milwaukee and Gus Williams of Seattle scored 22 points each.

Royal Victoria Marathon

Japanese contingent expected to join crowded field in Fun Run

Gruelling though it may be, fun is what they call it and, given some warm spring sunshine, there should be a good crowd of participants out for their share of it.

"It" is the second annual Good Times Fun Run, in which contestants will start at 9 a.m. Saturday, April 26, from Mile 0 in Beacon Hill Park.

Sponsored by Tourism British Columbia and organised by the Royal Victoria Marathon Committee, this year's race will be over one loop of the official marathon course to be used for the Royal Victoria Marathon, sponsored by the Victoria Times and radio station CJVI, on Sept. 20. The Good Times Fun Run will be half the marathon distance — just over 13 miles.

Prizes or trophies will be awarded in all categories — open men, open women, junior (under 16) men and women, pre-masters (30-39 years), masters men (40 years and up) and masters women (35 years and up) — as well as team trophies and several hidden prizes which will all be handed out at the awards ceremony immediately following the race.

A large number of runners from Japan, as well as many athletes involved in the Royal Victoria Marathon training clinic that is preparing people for the September marathon, are expected to take part in the Fun Run.

Registration forms are available from all municipal recreation centres, the Victoria YM-YWCA, the Crystal Pool, the University of Victoria, Pimlotts Sporting Goods, Memorial Arena and CJVI.

The entry fee is $3.

Annual chinook limit might boost stocks

Some rambling notes along the trail:

Members of the Sports Fishing Advisory Board have recommended a sane alternative to Federal Fisheries' proposed 20-inch size limit on chinook salmon.

At a meeting over the weekend in Vancouver, they suggested an annual catch limit of 30 chinooks, coupled with emergency short-term closures or bag limit reductions in certain specific problem areas, would serve the purpose of conserving the declining stocks of chinook salmon along the Pacific Coast.

The new regulation, if imposed (and federal fisheries representatives at the meeting appeared to accept the idea) would not apply to pinks, coho or sockeye.

Other recommendations made by the SFAB involved a proviso that sport fishing reductions not take effect until there was a corresponding curtailment of commerical fishing and insistance that sports fishing groups be given equal representation on the federal ministerial advisory committee.

Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc said last week in Vancouver that changes in sports fishing regulations wouldn't be made until Jan. 1, 1981 and added that a sports fisning licence was definitely in the works.

The SFAB endorsed a $5 licence during the meeting and later discussion among federal fisheries personnel revealed that it might possibly be set up in conjunction with the provincial freshwater licence.

Anyone planning a trip to Alaska, the Yukon or the western portion of the Northwest Territories should grab the latest copy of The Milepost.

Continually updated each year, it's by far the most comprehensive guide to travel throughout the north country. Listed are mile-by-mile logs of all the major highways, detailed maps, hundreds of photographs, information and schedules on ferries, airlines, cruise ships and railroads.

The book, published by Alaska Northwest Publishing Company, is available in most book stores and costs in the vicinity of $10.

Brown trout angling on the Cowichan River might once again gain world fame.

Rick Axford of the Fish and Wildlife Branch office in Duncan said that 12,000 fry were transplanted from incubation boxes to tributary streams of the Cowichan last week. The fish were placed upstream from natural barriers, which block spawning salmon — thus eliminating competition by salmon fry.

In addition, a minimum size limit of 40 cm. has been put on browns. This gives the fish a chance to spawn at least once before they're caught.

Other conservation measures include a closure on browns from July 1 to Apr. 11.

The angling closure on the upper section of the Cowichan ended today and the fly fishing only restriction in the upper reaches starts today and ends Nov. 14.

Branch plans also call for stocking of larger brown trout fry in a tributary of the Adam River near Kelsey Bay.

The dangers of excessive speed on logging roads were amply illustrated by a grim sight encountered on a fishing trip at the weekend.

We spotted a late-model four-wheel-drive pickup truck laying upside-down and barely visible over the edge of an embankment. It had obviously been going at a fair rate of speed before striking a washout across the road and smashing head-on into a tree.

We didn't find anyone around but bloodstains on the roof of the cab and the crushed condition of the dash indicate the driver had not escaped injury completely.

Upon turning in the licence number to the Colwood RCMP — in case the truck had been stolen or someone was missing — we found the accident had been reported the day before.

Luckily, nobody was killed.

I've personally had several close calls in the past few years with drivers of four-wheel-drive vehicles racing around on back roads.

So take it easy.

I don't particularly want to find a body next time.

Cromartie's homers key unusual streak

Times News Services

Warren Cromartie isn't known as a home run hitter. But his tear in Montreal Expos' 7-3 crushing of New York Mets on Tuesday kept alive an unusual string for him.

"We've never lost a game that I've hit a homer in," he said after hitting two against the Mets in New York.

"I hit five my first year, 10 the next, and eight last year, and we won every time."

The two homers in one game was a first for Cromartie, and he won't be surprised if it never happens again.

"Homers are not my style," he said. "I'm a line drive hitter. If they come, they come."

Cromartie's first homer capped a five-run Montreal first inning that was fueled by three errors.

Cromartie's first homer came off loser Craig Swan, 1-1, and the second off reliever Mark Bomback in the sixth.

Meanwhile, Atlanta Braves have played six games this season and lost all six, and the streak is taking its toll on manager Bobby Cox.

"It's driving me crazy," said Cox following his team's 6-2 loss at Houston. "I can't sleep at night — and when I do, I hate to wake up in the morning and read the newspapers."

Houston's Joe Niekro baffled the Braves with his knuckleball, pitching a six-hitter, and the Astros broke the game open early with four runs in the second inning. Doubles by Luis Pujols and Julio Gonzalez were the big hits in the uprising.

It was the first win of the year for Niekro, who was 21-11 last season.

In other National League action, Cincinnati Reds beat San Francisco Giants 8-3, St. Louis Cardinals topped Philadelphia Phillies 7-2 and San Diego Padres outscored Los Angeles Dodgers 9-5.

Cincinnati raised its record to 6-0 as Dave Concepcion drove in three runs, Dave Collins continued his hot hitting with three singles and Tom Seaver won his first start of the year.

It was Seaver's 236th victory of his career, tying him with former New York Yankees pitcher Whitey Ford for 40th place on the all-time list.

Pete Vuckovich pitched a five-hitter and also doubled in two runs as St. Louis defeated Philadelphia.

Rick Wise doubled in a pair of runs and posted his first win of the year with relief help from Steve Mura as San Diego beat Los Angeles.

In the American League, Jon Matlack handcuffed Cleveland Indians on five hits and ran his consecutive scoreless innings streak to 18 to lead Texas Rangers to a 3-0 victory. It was his first triumph since last June 26 after elbow miseries forced offseason surgery.

Frank Tanana, making his first start after tendonitis in his shoulder forced him to miss three months last season, pitched a complete game and scattered eight hits as California Angels defeated Minnesota Twins 3-1.

Oakland defeated Seattle Mariners 12-3, Chicago White Sox defeated New York Yankees 4-3 in 14 innings and Baltimore Orioles routed Kansas City Royals 12-2 in other games.

Rick Dempsey and Ken Singleton both hit two-run homers to pace a 12-hit attack as Baltimore won easily in its first home game in front of a record opening-day crowd of 50,-119.

Jim Palmer allowed six hits through eight innings to earn his second victory of the season.

Maddox signs rich pact

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Outfielder Garry Maddox has signed a long-term, multi-million dollar contract with Philadelphia Phillies, his agent Jerry Kapstein said Tuesday.

While there were no official figures, it is believed the centre fielder will receive about $700,000 a year.

Maddox has been negotiating since January, 1979. In spring training, he said an impasse had been reached and that he would play out his option and become a free agent at the end of this season.

In the first three games of the season, he hit .364 with one home run and three runs batted in.

Turcotte enters 'hall'

TORONTO (CP) — Ron Turcotte, one of North America's leading thoroughbred riders before an accident ended his career nearly two years ago, is one of five new members of Canada's Sports Hall of Fame.

Others named were skeet shooter Barney Hartman, skating coach Sheldon Galbraith, writer Andy O'Brien and the late Ken Murray, a former manager of the Canadian Olympic Association.

Turcotte, 38, a native of Grand Falls, N.B., had a 20-year career cut short on July 18, 1978, when he was involved in a race spill that left him confined to a wheelchair.

During his days of prominence at thoroughbred tracks around North America, Turcotte rode 3,-033 winners to nearly $28 million in purses. In 1973, he became the first jockey to ride his mounts to the Triple Crown since Eddie Arcaro in 1948. Riva Ridge and Secretariat were among the champions he rode.

Hartman, 63, a native of Swan River, Man., and now a resident of Brownsburg, Que., is regarded as the greatest skeet shooter Canada has produced.

Galbraith, 57, a native of Teulon, Man., is regarded as one of the world's leading figure skating coaches.

O'Brien was selling hats when he took a second job writing sports stories for the Montreal Standard. His first assignment was a senior baseball game which turned into a riot and the story which appeared under his name on the newspaper's front page the following day started him on a 42-year career culminating in a lengthy tenure as sports editor of Weekend Magazine.

Weighlifters find tough test in trials

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian weightlifters hope to bring home gold, silver or bronze medals from the summer Olympic Games in Moscow.

But before they get to Moscow, they will have their hands full making the team, says Richard Campion, technical director of the Canadian Weightlifting Federation.

The team will be selected next month following a gruelling series of events which includes the Pan-American championships in Havana, the Canadian championships in Regina and the junior world championships in Montreal.

"It's a strange situation," he says. "In the past we've only been able to qualify four or five and now we have 18 to choose from."

Veterans Russ Pryor of Hamilton, Ont., Marc Cardinal and Terry Hadlow of Ottawa, and Gary Bratty of Stoney Creek, Ont., are among those seeking berths.

To qualify for the Games in any of the 10 weight categories, the athlete must equal the Olympic standard.

"In the past the guys knew they were on the list and they were content to just make the standard," Campion said. "Now they have to go out and do better and the competition is getting more and more ferocious."

That competitiveness was missing prior to the 1976 Montreal Olympics and Canada's performance was dismal.

Pryor ended 11th and Bob Santavy of Sarnia, Ont., was 18th.

Yves Carignan of St. Hyacinthe, Que., and Pierre St. Jean of Montreal bombed out, a lifters' term meaning that they missed all their attempts.

"It was really tough on Pierre (St. Jean) because he took the Olympic oath to open the Games, the first time by a weightlifter," Campion said.

"There was a lot of pressure on those home-town boys."

But Campion said weightlifters didn't lose heart and the national program has rebounded.

"These guys are dedicated and there's never a week that goes by that they're not in their training program," he said. "They workout 11 times a week and that adds up to about 22 hours."

In other countries where athletes are supported by the state, lifters put in about 30 or more hours a week.

All lifters must do three lifts each in the snatch and the clean-and-jerk. Their finish is determined by the total of their final lifts in the two events.

The snatch is a one-tempo movement in which the weight is lifted above the head to arms length.

The clean-and-jerk is a two-tempo movement where the weight is hoisted to shoulder height. After a slight pause, the weight is thrust above the head to arms length.

Leonard, Duran title fight set

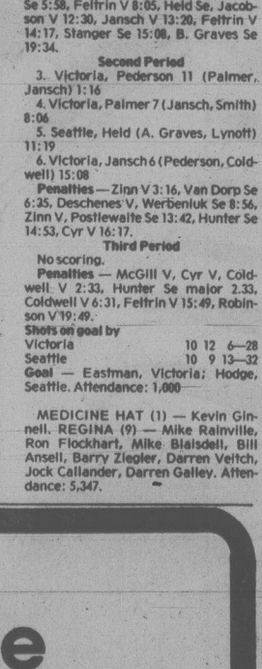

PANAMA CITY (AP) — Sugar Ray Leonard and Roberto Duran will fight for the world welterweight boxing championship June 20, with Montreal one of the possible sites.

Promoter Bob Arum announced the date Tuesday, saying Leonard, the World Boxing Council welterweight champ, and Duran, former lightweight king and now the No.1 welterweight contender, will share $6.5 million. Leonard gets $5 million and Duran $1.5 million.

Mike Treiner, Leonard's lawyer, said the fight would be in either Canada or the United States. Among possible sites mentioned by the promoters were the Houston Astrodome, the New Orleans Superdome, Caesar's Palace Hotel in Las Vegas, and the Olympic Stadium in Montreal.

The contract signing came at the end of a three-hour meeting in the Panama home of businessman Carlos Eleta, who manages Duran.

Arum said earlier this month Leonard would fight World Boxing Association welterweight champion Pipino Cuevas of Mexico, but the former U.S. Olympic champion had been under pressure from the WBC to sign for a fight with Duran or face loss of his title.

Laker star collects award for sixth time

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of Los Angeles Lakers has been named the National Basketball Association player of the year by the Sporting News magazine.

Abdul-Jabbar received 112 of 188 votes cast by the league's players, the St. Louis-based magazine said, to win the award for an unprecedented sixth time.

Second place in the balloting with 40 votes was guard George Gervin of San Antonio Spurs, followed by Julius Erving of Philadelphia '76ers with 18½ votes.

The Sporting News said Abdul-Jabbar, Gervin and Erving were joined on the magazine's all-star team by forward Dan Roundfield of Atlanta Hawks and guard Gus Williams of Seattle SuperSonics.

The second team has Moses Malone, last season's top player, at centre for Houston Rockets, Marques Johnson of Milwaukee Bucks and Walter Davis of Phoenix Suns as forwards and Dennis Johnson of the Sonics and Paul Westphal of the Suns as guards.

Abdul-Jabbar was previously named top NBA player by the magazine in 1971, 1972, 1974, 1976 and 1977.

Poor draft luck leaves Canucks at crossroads

By GRANT KERR

VANCOUVER (CP) — Wanted: a puck-handling centre, a high-scoring right winger and an offensive-minded defenceman.

The help-wanted sign still hangs on the doors of the Vancouver Canucks' office at the Pacific Coliseum after 10 frustrating seasons in the National Hockey League — years dominated by poor draft selections.

The Canucks were eliminated from the Stanley Cup playoffs last weekend by Buffalo Sabres and the weakness of the Vancouver team was obvious against a club much more proficient in handling the puck.

The Sabres, who entered the NHL at the same time as the Canucks, have many skilled performers and are capable of filling the net on a given night. The Canucks do not have players of the calibre of Gil Perreault, Rick Martin and Danny Gare.

Vancouver's problem, after gaining just four playoff berths in a decade, has been an inability to make good use of the league's amateur draft system. After 10 years, just two original No. 1 draft picks remain with the club.

Those two — wingers Jere Gillis and Rick Blight — weren't even on the active roster at season's end. Blight underwent knee surgery after only 33 games before undergoing and Gillis played 67 before injuring his back.

Blight and Gillis are rated as questionable at best in the future plans of the Canucks, although Blight did make a comeback of sorts in the 1979-80 season with 12 goals before he was injured in December. Gillis scored only 13 goals for the second straight season, remaining a puzzle to coach Harry Neale and general manager Jake Milford.

STAN SMYL

... remains a puzzle

The Canucks seem to have been snake-bit with draft choices since they entered the NHL. They lost a spin of the roulette wheel at entry when Buffalo was lucky enough to get the right to draft Perreault. Vancouver drafted second in 1970 and took Dale Tallon.

Tallon, like six other No. 1s, was eventually traded. The others were Josh Guevremont, Don Lever, Dennis Ververgaert, Bob Dailey, Bill Derlago and Rick Vaive.

The Canucks also traded away a first-round pick four years ago to get goalkeeper Curt Ridley from Atlanta Flames. Ridley was not the answer to the netminding riddle and was sold this past season to Toronto.

Vancouver has been without offensive firepower for years, although the team did win a Smythe Division title five years ago, mainly on the basis of strong goaltending by Gary Smith. Without capable goal scorers, the Canucks have been overly deficient on the power-play.

"Our power-play and our goals-for have been our two biggest enemies in the two years I've been here," says Neale. "But sometimes it takes a while to get something built."

Milford dispatched Ron Sedlbauer, Lever, Derlago and Vaive in controversial trades last season in order to get pluggers suited to Neale's style of coaching.

Those trades brought some scoring strength in Ivan Boldirev from Atlanta and Dave (Tiger) Williams from Toronto, but the Canucks still lack the necessary puck-handling skills to be a contender.

Vancouver finished a distant third in the Smythe Division, behind Chicago Black Hawks and St. Louis blues, and were 15th overall in the NHL, gaining a playoff berth by going undefeated in their last five games. The improvement over the previous year was just seven points — to 70 in the 80-game schedule.

On the plus side was the play of Glen Hanlon in goal, Kevin McCarthy on defence and the scoring of Stan Smyl and Thomas Gradin.

Hanlon gave Vancouver outstanding netminding early in the season, but he tired during gruelling road trips at mid-season and was replaced near the end of the schedule by veteran Gary Bromley.

Smyl scored 31 goals and tied the team record (set by Andre Boudrias) of 78 points in a season. Gradin, like Smyl in his second pro season, had 30 goals and 75 points. Neale spent an entire season looking for a left winger who would complement Smyl and Gradin.

The Canucks finished the season without a team captain following the trade of Lever to Atlanta.

Milford and Neale believe the Canucks obtained a leader in Williams, the rugged winger from Toronto who was suspended for the final playoff game after a stick-swinging incident involving Buffalo coach Scotty Bowman.

Neale now has more than his share of rugged customers, with Smyl, Williams, Curt Fraser, Gillis, Harold Snepsts, Hughes and Dave Logan all assessed more than 100 minutes in penalties last season.

Now Milford must find the necessary skills to make the team the right kind of mixture to play with teams like Buffalo. Milford has already signed Swedish centre Lars Molin, labelled another Gradin by the Vancouver management.

A right winger likely will have to come in the draft and a defenceman in a trade. The Canucks have an excess of left wingers in Williams, Gillis, Fraser, Brent Ashton, Darcy Rota and injured Harold Phillipoff.

The Canucks went for a right winger in the first round of last year's draft, but Vaive couldn't handle the pressure of being a No. 1 draft in Vancouver and was traded, with Derlago, to Toronto for Williams.

The Canucks used to attract sell-out crowds at the Coliseum — they went five seasons without an unsold ticket — but interest has waned the past few years and the franchise is quickly approaching the crossroads of professional sport.

In a competitive market for the entertainment dollar — Vancouver Whitecaps won the North American Soccer League championship in 1979 — the Canucks are desperate to prove that they demand top billing on the West Coast.

Jim Gregory headed for Vancouver?

VANCOUVER (CP) — Jim Gregory, former general manager of Toronto Maple Leafs, is one of several candidates under consideration for a possible new executive post with Vancouver Canucks, says general manager Jake Milford.

Milford said Gregory has been approached about the possibility of becoming assistant general manager.

"I'm interested in getting an assistant," Milford, 64, said. "My mind's not made up yet, but I've talked to Gregory about it once."

Gregory, 44, now is director of the NHL's Central Scouting System. He spent 10 years as general manager of the Leafs until Punch Imlach returned to Toronto last summer.

Milford, recently given a one-year extension on his contract through 1982, by Canuck owner Frank Griffiths, has hinted he may step down as general manager after next season.

Gregory was coach of the Canucks in 1967-68 when the team was in the Western Hockey League.

Move to disqualify Saginaw rejected by commissioner

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Jack Riley, commissioner of the International Hockey League, has ruled against Milwaukee Admirals in their effort to have Saginaw Gears disqualified from the Turner Cup playoffs, says coach Phil Wittliff of the Admirals.

Six Admirals players were injured in two weekend games with Saginaw, prompting Milwaukee owner Lloyd Pettit to say he was pulling the Admirals out of the playoffs to protest "violence with intent to injure."

The Admirals asked that the Gears, leading the series 2-0, be disqualified and the Admirals instead advance to the next round.

Riley came to Milwaukee on Tuesday and viewed films of the games in which the injuries occurred.

Hudon double driving champ at record Cloverdale meeting

By BILL WALKER

For a standardbred driver who broke his leg in three places last year, Joe Hudon has come a long way back.

Hudon, 28, last Saturday captured both driving honors at Cloverdale Raceway.

He won two races on the final card of the season to finish with 163 winners for the meeting, 43 more than runner-up and defending-champion Keith Linton who had 120.

Hudon's percentage of .394 under the Universal Drivers Rating System was also the best for the meeting with Linton runner-up.

Linton, who finished ahead of Hudon in winners and percentage at Sandown last summer, had a UDRS percentage of .370.

Grant Hollingsworth was third in both departments. He had 89 winners and a .326 UDRS rating.

Mutuel and attendance totals were up from last season. The mutuel handle for the 124-day meeting was a record $41,778,829 compared to $32,513,811 in 1978-79. Average attendance was 2,647, up 12 per cent, and the average handle $336,515, an increase of 26 per cent.

The one-day mutuel record was $501,026.

Hudon suffered his broken leg in a multi-horse and driver pileup on the backstretch on May 31 in last year's meeting at Sandown.

Linton, Joe Rankin and Roy Tutty were other drivers involved in the spill but they were not injured.

Hudon drove with a cast while recovering and then finished up strongly, giving Linton a fight for UDRS honors.

The Cloverdale season was also a hallmark for Hudon in that on March 6 he drove his 1,000th standardbred winner. He was in the sulky for The Wild Weed, a horse owned by his father.

In 1978 he represented Canada in the world harness drivers' championship.

The season wasn't a total disappointment for Linton, however. Far from it.

Earlier it was announced that he had captured the Canadian driving title for 1979. He finished the year with an UDRS of .390, 12 percentage points more than Chuck Fraleigh and 14 points more than Hudon.

(The Universal Drivers Rating System is based on a formula where nine points are awarded for a first, five points for a second and three points for a third. The sum of these figures is divided by the total number of drives multiplied by nine. This system is used throughout North America and is generally considered the best method of evaluating a driver's skills.)

Linton's Canadian Trotting Association award marked the fourth straight year that he had achieved that honor. He also won in 1973, giving him the title for five of the last seven years.

Hudon, Linton and Hollingsworth will be among the drivers coming here for the Sandown Harness Raceway season which begins Saturday, May 17.

Willie moons Sounder: 'shorts just slipped'

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver Whitecaps are expecting the worst if the North American Soccer League takes disciplinary action against winger Willie Johnston after an incident here Saturday against Seattle Sounders.

Johnston, who scored one of Vancouver's two goals in a successful shootout, dropped his drawers in front of the Seattle bench. The "mooning" incident was missed by most of the 27,000 fans at Empire Stadium.

The controversial Scot apparently was deriding his former Scottish World Cup team-mate, Bruce Rioch of the Sounders, who missed his shootout try before Johnston scored.

"In some circumstances it might be considered funny," Whitecap coach Bob McNab said Monday. "But after the New York Cosmos incidents last season, it seems likely the league will get a report and will take some action."

Carlos Alberto of the Cosmos was suspended for one game in the NASL playoffs against Vancouver last year for spitting at a game official.

Johnston was unwilling to discuss the incident after the game.

"They (the shorts) just slipped off," he said.

General manager Tony Waiters said the Whitecaps would take disciplinary action of their own against Johnston, likely in the form of a fine.

Johnston has been one of the few effective Vancouver performers this season as the Whitecaps, defending Soccer Bowl champions, are off to a slow start with just one win in three games. Johnston scored goals — he had just one last season in league play — in each of the first two games (both losses) and added the shootout marker against Seattle after the Sounders and Whitecaps were scoreless through regulation time and overtime.

Whitecaps are home to Minnesota Kicks Saturday.

Elk ranch permit denied

The provincial government has killed a Campbell River man's dream to sell elk antlers to the Oriental aphrodisiac market and elk semen for artificial insemination on wild deer farms in New Zealand.

The fish and wildlife branch has refused to let John Dowd capture 45 wild Roosevelt elk for his proposed farm.

A senior branch official said Dowd is one of several persons who have suggested the elk farm idea in recent years, but this attempt has drawn more attention than the others because elk in east-central Vancouver Island have been causing crop damage on a number of farms.

"The antlers are removed about the end of July in what is called their velvet stage, when they are about as soft as a cucumber and just before they harden up for the fall rutting season," the official said.

He said a mature Roosevelt elk produces antlers that weigh between 12 pounds and 18 pounds.

Another branch official said that Grade A deer antlers have been fetching as much as $160 a pound on the international market.

New Zealand's wild deer farms are similar to North American beef feedlots, with a large number of animals raised in a confined area.

The New Zealand deer meat is exported to the European restaurant trade and the antlers are sold to Far East buyers.

"The antlers are highly nutritional, high in hormones and are cut up like a cucumber," the official said. "They are dry-frozen then further processed and sold as nutritional food additives, aphrodisiacs etc."

He explained that Dowd's permit application was turned down because B.C. does not have adequate policy guidelines to allow the introduction of game ranching.

"All wild game is owned by the Crown and there is no legislation that determines who would own the offspring from captured animals, or to govern the sale of game meat in B.C." the official said.

Hurricane winds hit Okanagan

KELOWNA (CP) — A hurricane-force wind raged through the Okanagan Valley for 30 minutes Monday, toppling trees and damaging houses.

But hospitals reported no injuries.

Strongest gust registerd 136 kilometres an hour.

The storm was caused by thermal conditions which forced downdrafts of cold air into the warm trough of air below, a weather office spokesman said.

Temperatures dropped to 8 degrees Celsius from 20 in about 10 minutes.

The wind blew out store windows, tore roofs off houses and toppled at least 20 trees in the city.

The wind struck just as schools were preparing to close for the day. Principals at two elementary schools kept their pupils in class until the storm ended.

The move paid off at Central elementary school, where a 36-metre tree crashed into the playground which normally would have been filled with children.

Home better after Russian trip

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Local students who returned last week from a 13-day visit to the Soviet Union say one of the main lessons learned during their stay was a new appreciation for Canada.

The 37 D. P. Todd Secondary School students were among a group of 170 Canadian students and 19 teachers to visit the Soviet Union.

"It's an intense country, but we were able to wander around," says Grade 10 student Sheldon Armstrong.

Grade 12 student Judy Rubingh, 18, said Moscow was the most interesting city, but also the most depressing.

Black was their favorite color and they were twice as suspicious as anywhere else, she said.

"If you went for a walk, everyone would scrutinize you like you didn't belong," she added.

The students said black-market activities flourished in the country, with the largest demand being for clothing.

One student with a three-piece suit was worth an offer of 600 rubles ($1,080,) while another student with a mesh T-shirt was enticed with two bottles of Russian champagne worth $28.

A ruble is worth about $1.80 and 15 of them will buy an hour's time on a Russian bowling lane.

English teacher Nick Ramage, who organized the trip, said one of the best bargains was on the national airline Aeroflot because the pilots drove like "fighter pilots."

"They circle around until they find a hole in the clouds, then dive," Ramage said.

He said the most a person pays on the airline is 30 rubles ($54) for the equivalent of flying from B.C. to Newfoundland.

But not everything was a bargain, however, as students said they saw Russians lining up to pay $28 for nylons and $9 for lipstick.

Mine tailings harmless: firm

VANCOUVER (CP) — Tailings to be discharged into Alice Arm from the re-opening of a molybdenum mine in northwestern B.C. will have no adverse effect on the environment, a mining company spokesman said Tuesday.

Wayne Lenton, general manager of Amax of Canada Ltd., said that molybdenum tailings from the mine will contain the same material natural streams now carry into the inlet.

His statement came on the heels of a resolution passed last week at the tribal convention of Nishga Indian chiefs to oppose reopening the mine.

Forced retiree returns to work

VANCOUVER (CP) — Retired janitor Eugene Blackburn — ordered reinstated by the B.C. Labor Relations Board — is scheduled to return to work next Monday with the Insurance Corporation of B.C., corporation spokesman Bob Egby said Tuesday.

In light of the board ruling, Egby said, ICBC will be reviewing its current retirement policy to ensure fairness to all employees, regardless of age.

The LRB ruled last Thursday that ICBC should not have retired Blackburn, 67, of Port Moody, simply because he had reached so-called retirement age in August, 1978.

End to forced retirement?

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — The B.C. Human Rights Commission will seek legislative changes to end forced retirement at age 65 years, human rights commissioner Harry Crosby said Tuesday.

Crosby told the commission's monthly meeting, held for the first time outside the Lower Mainland, that mandatory retirement should not be automatic at age 65, and the 12-member board will petition the government in about a week to make the necessary changes.

SFU striker found not guilty

BURNABY (CP) — The last of 18 persons to go to trial for actions related to a strike at Simon Fraser University in 1979 was found not guilty in provincial court Tuesday on two criminal charges.

Bill Burgess was one of 18 pickets arrested March 22, 1979, during a strike by Local 2 of the Association of University and College Employees at SFU.

Coast guard hit by fuel costs

VANCOUVER (CP) — Herb Buchanan, western regional director of the Canadian Coast Guard, said today an additional $1 million is required in 1980 to meet rising fuel costs for 18 vessels on the West Coast.

Buchanan said he has received promises of extra federal funds to cover about two-thirds of the costs. However, the shortfall could result in further cutbacks in services already taxed to the limit.

Belts tighten down on farm

By ROD EDWARDS

NEWDALE, Man. (CP) — The clouds in Bruce and Carol Dalgarno's future seemed so far away on that brilliant Prairie winter afternoon.

But the long shadow of inflation and high interest rates can hang like a pall over any interview about the economic outlook for young farm families like the Dalgarnos.

In the sun-bathed kitchen of their small but cosy farm home 60 kilometres north of Brandon, the Dalgarnos reflected sombrely on the plight of young farmers today.

"When you start paying interest on operating money of around $100,000 a year, there is quite a difference between 10 or 12 per cent and 16 or 17," said 30-year-old Bruce Dalgarno, who turned from plumbing to farming five years ago.

"Interest makes your fuel and fertilizer, all inputs, go up and that's really what gets us. Most of that money is paid out six months before you have a product to sell."

To make things worse, those interest rates are compounded by the inflated costs of all the fertilizers, chemicals, fuel and machinery needed in a farming operation.

But the Dalgarnos — parents of Andrew, 3, and Karen, 10 months — are not as concerned about economic forecasts as they are about weather bulletins.

"The variance in the crop from year to year has a bigger role to play in my take-home pay than inflation," said Bruce whose youthful looks don't yet reflect the rigors of farming.

For instance, a dry growing season last year severely reduced the crops of barley, wheat and rapeseed on the 1,400-acre farm.

"So this year, if we were looking at a new piece of machinery . . . well, you can't afford it because last year was bad and you don't have the money."

He said if an average income from his farm is $120 an acre and the crop is down 10 per cent, that amounts to $12 an acre.

"That's more than $16,000 that would have gone a long way to buying that new piece of machinery."

On the other hand, a bumper crop with good prices could mean an income of from $160 to $200 an acre and that would translate into many thousands of dollars in increased income.

"Last year was a very poor year," said Bruce, whose outgoing personality contrasts with that of his more reflective, soft-spoken wife.

"If we have another one like it this year we're going to be in a very bad financial position. And if we have two more years like this we just won't be farming, we'll be bankrupt."

Most city wives probably believe their counterparts on the farm have a decided advantage when it comes to feeding their families and paying other household bills.

But Carol Dalgarno challenges that assumption.

"In fact, we usually go shopping in the city because things are cheaper there, particularly clothing."

She said that while she grows most of her own vegetables, she still has to pay neighbors market prices for meat then must have it cut and wrapped by the local butcher.

"I just paid the grocery bill today and that was $150 for a month. But we have vegetables and meat in our freezer."

The farm family probably loses out in utility costs, though, paying an average of $50 a month for electricity and about $600 a year for propane heat.

"But I think the people on a farm are more flexible than city people," said Carol.

"If you have a poor crop you just tighten up the belt. If you have a good year you can go somewhere like Hawaii for Christmas."

Mother Teresa plans $1M trip

EDMONTON (CP) — Mother Teresa, winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, will visit St. Paul, Alta., on Aug. 2-3 for what might be a million-dollar event.

The $1-million is what organizers in the town of 4,600, 150 kilometres northeast of Edmonton, hope to give the nun for her work with lepers in India.

Organizers of the event — the Mother Teresa Habitat Institute of Alberta, a non-denominational, charitable organization in St. Paul in 1976 — are making plans.

Moved by Mother Teresa's plea for the western world to give more than money to the world's poor, the group decided to build a house in St. Paul — using volunteer labor and donations — and use the money from sale of the house to build homes for lepers in India.

What started as a project to raise about $100,000 has mushroomed. Now they're aiming at $1 million. W ith the news of her visit, organizers are certain contributions will flood in.

Chancellor post to ex-justice

SASKATOON (CP) — Former Supreme Court of Canada Justice Emmett Hall defeated three other candidates to become the new chancellor of the University of Saskatchewan.

Hall, 81, who succeeds the late John Diefenbaker, will assume office immediately for a three-year term. Results of the election were announced today.

Hall is scheduled to be installed as chancellor May 15. He will preside over spring convocation ceremonies that evening.

Calgarians are workaholics

CALGARY (CP) — Calgary residents are workaholics who spend much of their leisure time in front of television sets, a study commissioned by the city's parks and recreation department shows.

The study, done by consultants Rethink Inc., says Calgarians work 44 hours or more a week compared to an average 40 in most other Canadian cities.

Residents spend an average of two to three hours a day watching the tube but spend only two to six hours a week in sport, cultural or recreational activities.

Almost half the people surveyed said they leave the city for their holidays. Only 15 per cent spent their entire vacation at home.

Cave visitors warned off

CALGARY (CP) — Enormous chunks of rock falling from the roof of the Moose Mountain caves have prompted forestry officials to ask school children and tourists not to visit the caverns.

Joe Burritt, an Alberta forest service recreation officer, said it is unsafe for people to explore the popular caves 50 kilometres southwest of Calgary.

To make matters worse, body heat, laterns and fires used for light have caused ice columns in the caverns to melt. Twenty years ago, there were seven ice columns running from the rocky roof to the ground.

"The last time I went up, two years ago, there were only three left," Burritt said, blaming the weather for much of the damage.

He is especially concerned about groups of school children scrambling over loose rock on the slope leading to the cave and sending rock falling down on others below.

"We have been in a pickle," Burritt said. "We were going to close off the caves but it would be pretty difficult unless you blocked them off."

However, forestry officials are discouraging heavy use of the area this spring and Burritt has sent a letter to the public school board requesting school classes take field trips elsewhere.

"Nobody has seen the big sections of rock fall, but you can see them lying on the ice," Burritt said.

Home owners association formed as full-time lobby

TORONTO (CP) — The man behind the Canadian Home Owners Association says the group will try to establish a permanent office in Ottawa staffed by at least three full-time employees who would lobby the federal government for homeowners' rights.

Vivian Woolford, 32, an unemployed Mississauga, Ont., man who wants mortgage interest rates pegged by the federal government at 10 per cent, said Tuesday the group will also try to form a 26-member executive board.

Representatives of the homeowners' association are expected to meet Sept. 15 in the Toronto area to select the lobbyists and the board of directors, Woolford said.

The organization would be financed from $25 membership fees.

Blair Jackson, president of Jackson, Doran and Associates, a Toronto communications firm advising the homeowners' lobby, said he is not certain whether the homeowners' association will have strong support across Canada.

He said $25 membership fees were recently returned to the few people who had joined the association to clear confusion. Some people had thought that the association was part of a protest group, headed by Woolford, asking the federal government to freeze mortgage rates at 10 per cent.

The association is intended to be more than a protest group, Jackson said. It would have wide-ranging features to protect homeowners.

Meanwhile, Woolford, a father of four, said he expects to lose his home in Mississauga, just west of Toronto, because he is three months behind in his mortgage payments. He said he and his family will move in with his brother in Toronto.

Woolford said he gave up his job as a car salesman two months ago to concentrate on fighting for the rights of homeowners.

Indians plead for better health care

EDMONTON (CP) — Leathery-faced Indian elder Henry Smith prayed in his native tongue Tuesday that former Supreme Court Justice Emmett Hall would be open-minded and accept the B.C. Indian Chiefs' submission on changes to Canada's health care system.

Smith, a grey-haired elder of the Tsartlip Band of Central Saanich, stood before Hall and said his prayer before the nine-member delegation began its lengthy presentation in a downtown Edmonton hotel.

In 81-year-old Hall, the Indians found someone who was prepared to listen even though he told them he had no jurisdiction over one of the matters they raised.

Although Hall told the chiefs he had no jurisdiction to deal with complaints about health care in Alert Bay, the Indians insisted on reading a 17-page submission into the record that was earlier made to Dr. Gary Goldthorpe who was carrying out a federal inquiry into health care in the isolated community.

George Manuel, president of the Union of British Columbia Indian Chiefs, told Hall doctors must be ready to be more accountable to the public than they currently are if they expect hefty incomes.

"We are rapidly approaching a situation in which doctors upon whom we depend for medical care are looked upon with suspicion and distrust," Manuel said.

He said doctors have to realize that if their demands are to be met, they have to give something in return. "They cannot have everything their own way."

He said Indians would be prepared to support a fee increase for doctors if two conditions were met, one of which would be that physicians be more accountable.

The other is that doctors and dentists must try to solve the problem of a lack of health care services for Indians in isolated areas.

Edmonton is the final stop on Hall's 11-city, cross-Canada round of hearings into Canada's troubled health care system. He was commissioned to conduct the inquiry by former health minister David Crombie before the Conservative government was defeated.

Alberta nurses strike Friday

EDMONTON (CP) — Picket lines will be established at 79 Alberta hospitals at 6 a.m. Friday and a province-wide strike will begin one hour later, the United Nurses of Alberta said Tuesday.

Simon Renouf, chief executive officer of the nurses' union, said all hospitals were given notice Tuesday afternoon and nothing short of a complete settlement before Friday could prevent the strike.

He left room, however, for a last-minute settlement, saying: "We could have a settlement in five minutes if we were offered a good wage."

The strike, involving 6,600 nurses, will not extend to the Three Hills Hospital, 80 kilometres northeast of Calgary, three hospitals in Edmonton and two in Calgary.

Nurses at Three Hills were the only ones to vote Monday against a strike.

Nfld.'s Vardy dies in exile

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — Oliver Vardy, who spent the last six years fighting attempts by the Newfoundland government to extradite from the United States on fraud and bribery charges, died Sunday in Clearwater, Fla., it was announced here.

Vardy, 73, former deputy minister of economic development under the Liberal administration of Joey Smallwood, was charged in absentia in 1973 with fraud, acceptance of bribes and breach of public trust in amounts totalling $760,000.

Extradition proceedings never got off the ground as Vardy's case went through various appeal stages in U.S. courts.

Vardy's whereabouts were unknown when the charges were laid in provincial court at St. John's, but in 1974 he was arrested by police in Panama City and taken to Miami for delivery to RCMP.

However, a Florida court declared him to be under U.S. protection pending the outcome of extradition hearings.

Explosive deposit

MONTREAL (CP) — The Royal Bank of Canada discovered 11 sticks of dynamite in a safety-deposit box at a branch in east-end Montreal Tuesday, a bank spokesman said.

No detonating device was found in the box, which apparently had not been opened since it was rented about three years ago by a person using a fictitious name, the spokesman said.

"The owner hadn't shown up for at least the last two years and had defaulted on his payments," the spokesman said.

Southam buys Star assets

MONTREAL (CP) — Southam Inc., owners of The Gazette, has bought the Montreal Star building for $16 million, Gazette publisher Robert McConnell said Tuesday.

The Star ceased publication last September and Southam took an option to buy the building, its contents and delivery trucks from FP Publications.

The Quebec labor department cleared the way for the sale Tuesday by approving decertification of a number of unions formerly representing Star employees.

Gazette publisher McConnell said he expects his newspaper's operations to move into the former rival's premises within three months.

The Gazette, the only remaining English-language daily in Montreal, wants the modern presses and spacious facilities of the building but has had to wait for the decertification of 11 of the Star's 14 bargaining units.

All members of the 11 units, which accounted for the vast majority of the 1,100 Star employees, signed waivers cancelling their successor rights in the building soon after the newspaper closed.

Not included in the sale are two older buildings attached to the main building. One houses the Montreal offices of FP Publications, former owner of The Star. The other building will continue to hold a number of commercial publishing and law offices and the Montreal bureau of The Canadian Press.

PM warns Quebec 'yes' is a dead-end

TRUDEAU
. . . a promise to all

By CAROL GOAR
and MARY JANIGAN
FP News Service

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau has kicked off his referendum battle with a plea for a massive "No" vote against sovereignty-association and an ingenious and often farcical tale of the "dead-end" consequences of a "Yes" vote.

In an hour-long speech to the Commons Tuesday, Trudeau argued that only an overwhelming rejection of the Parti Quebecois proposals will guarantee constitutional reform and greater economic stability for all Canadians.

He went on to describe — for the first time — how Quebecers will face a "political and legal dead-end" if they give the right to negotiate sovereignty-association to Quebec Premier Rene Levesque in the May 20 referendum. And he repeated his vow that his government will try to represent the interests of Canadians in all parts of the nation.

Trudeau's comments were part of the traditional Throne Speech debate in which Opposition Leader Joe Clark took the part of the aggrieved Westerner, reminding the Prime Minister that Quebecers were not the only dissatisfied members of Confederation.

New Democratic Party leader Ed Broadbent told Trudeau that it is all very well to talk about abstract ideals, but the Liberals have an obligation to recognize that they have exacerbated regional tensions by failing to ease the economic hardships of the poorest regions and groups.

The centrepiece of Trudeau's speech was the scenario spun around the consequences of a "yes" vote — a situation that he has usually refused to discuss in detail. The Prime Minister reasoned that Levesque would first approach provincial premiers in quest of association and that the premiers would refuse because they have "no cultural or economic interest" in the scheme.

Trudeau also pointed out that Levesque has consistently linked his goal of sovereignty with a promise of association that the referendum wording only allows him to proceed with these two goals simultaneously.

The federal government cannot possibly try to associate with a province when it is already a member of the Canadian federation, he said. And it is impossible to discuss sovereignty when Levesque has no association and when the federal government has just been given an electoral mandate to govern.

"Association can only take place with associates and there are none and independence can only take place with association and there is none, so therefore it won't take place," Trudeau contended, while Liberal MPs hooted their support.

He went on to warn, however, that only a massive vote against sovereignty association will prod the Parti Quebecois into abandoning its separatist goals and participating fully in constituional talks. He said that even a small margin of rejection would lead to continued uncertainty with "very detrimental economic consequences"

Trudeau's crucial speech began as a rambling lecture and only picked up punch when he rolled into the Quebec scenario. It took nearly 30 minutes, for example, for him to explain that Canadians turn to regional separtism when they feel that their national government cannot guarantee equality of opportunity or protection of the cultural and economic rights.

Liberal MPs only began to applaud when the Prime Minister charged that the referendum question was unclear because Quebecers "would have answered a resounding 'No' to a clear option for independence.

"What is important at this stage of our political life is to put an end to the uncertainty that Quebec has been in — and the only chance of having that is a massive 'No' vote," he said.

Clark adopted the role of the disaffected westerner in his first speech to the new Parliament.

"It makes no sense to me that a government which argues in Quebec about the sensitivity of the federal system should act with so little sensitivity in western Canada," the Opposition Leader said.

He characterized the Quebec referendum debate as merely the most blatant symptom of the regional tensions bubbling up across the country.

"It would be an error — a fundamental error for anyone in any part of the country and most particularly in the House of Commons — to underestimate the depth and the extent and the strength of frustration with the federal system that is now felt in western Canada."

Clark breezed through a declaration of his party's "absolute rejection" of Levesque's sovereignty-association plan almost as if Tory opposition to separatism is so obvious it hardly needs saying.

"As we know, the government of Quebec has published a proposal for sovereignty-association, a proposal that is absolutely incompatible with the idea of federalism. Consequently, it is absolutely unacceptable to members of this party and, I believe, of this Parliament."

Broadbent likewise took it for granted that Parliament was aware of his party's determination to fight for a united Canada. He focussed his attention on the economic strains pulling the country apart.

"Our goal must not be merely a temporary patching up of the grievances we find in this land now," he urged.

Clark blasts gov't over Games

Medal debate barred by 'No'

OTTAWA (CP) — A motion to have Kenneth Taylor, former Canadian ambassador to Iran, considered for the Order of Canada was blocked in the Commons Tuesday by an unidentified MP.

Taylor, who engineered the successful escape of six Americans from Iran earlier this year, has already been honored with a medal in the U.S and a Conservative MP thought a Canadian award might be in order.

Tom Cossitt, member for the Ontario riding of Leeds-Grenville, moved in the Commons that Parliament ask Gov.-Gen. Ed Schreyer to consider investing Taylor with the Order of Canada.

But an MP who was not spotted by reporters denied the necessary unanimous consent required to consider the motion.

When Cossitt later demanded a clarification on why the motion had not been approved, Prime Minister Trudeau said he was not the MP who said no. The Order of Canada must be detached from politics, he said.

OTTAWA — The hawkish Joe Clark of the election trail emerged in full flight Tuesday in Parliament.

His voice crackling with scorn, the opposition leader accused the government of lacking the courage and conviction to stand firm against the aggressiveness of Iran and the Soviet Union in a troubled world.

Within one day of the opening of Parliament, it has become unmistakably apparent that the Tories are determined to be the voice of hard-line pro-United States action in the international arena.

"This is not a time when nations such as Canada will have the luxury of flirting with soft-headed neutrality," Clark warned, in his first speech in the House of Commons since the election. The Tory Leader was responding to Monday's Speech from the Throne by the Liberal Government.

But his accusations and the needling of several Tory MPs failed to goad Prime Minister Trudeau into taking an unequivocal stand on whether Canada would support President Carter's boycott of the Moscow Olympics.

"I might point out that it does not take much courage just to announce that you are going to boycott the Olympics," Trudeau said, in a restrained, almost inaudible voice.

"I have indicated in a recent letter to President Carter that we would support him in the measures he announced and that we would join in those measures," Trudeau continued. "However, it is also important for us to bring other countries along."

The Tories dimsissed this approach as hiding behind other nations until it was safe to take a stand.

"We in this party are under no illusions whatsoever as to who our friends are. Our principal ally remains the United States, not because of the accident of geography but because of the sharing of basic goals and ideals."

Mid-way through his attack, Clark switched abruptly to a sharp personal attack on External Affairs Minister Mark MacGuigan.

He said Trudeau had relegated his rookie external affairs minister to the role of little more than his (Trudeau's) "puppet on a string," pointing out that MacGuigan's seat in the second row of the Liberal benches was dramatic evidence of his second-string status.

Sherrell's raise rumor denied

The cabinet minister responsible for the Insurance Corp. of B.C., Jim Hewitt, today angrily denied reports that Robbie Sherrell resigned as ICBC president because he didn't get the raise he wanted.

Sherrell announced Monday he was resigning, effective May 31, for personal reasons.

Hewitt said when someone states publicly that he is resigning for personal reasons, it should be the end of the matter.

He agreed, however, that there can be various connotations to the phrase and that even salary can be considered personal.

Sherrell is reported to have demanded the salary increase based on the performance of ICBC over the past two years.

According to sources, he was turned down because the government felt it would be awkward politically at a time when ICBC is involved in negotiations with its employees and facing demands from auto body shops.

Sherrell was hired two years ago at an annual salary of $80,000. His current salary is $86,400.

With a a $20,000 increase on top of that, he would have been making $106,400.

Canada's strike loss highest

CALGARY (CP) — Canada had the worst record of labor strife among the world's 19 leading industrial nations in 1978, says a report by the International Labor Organization in Geneva.

Canada registered 1,930 work days lost in industrial disputes per 1,000 workers in 1978, almost two working days for every worker in the country.

Canada also had the worst record in 1975 with 2,810 days lost and 1976 with 2,550 days lost. The report shows the Canadian loss figure dropped to an all time low of 830 in 1977, the second year of federal wage and price controls.

B.C. housing starts at record levels

VANCOUVER (CP) — First-quarter housing starts in B.C. climbed to a record 7,097 units, according to figures released Tuesday by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corp.'s B.C. office.

The figures show there were more housing starts in B.C. urban centres in March than in the Atlantic provinces, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and Saskatchewan combined.

However, a CMHC spokesman said the record figure for the first quarter must be placed in perspective.

"Don't expect the second-quarter figures to be a record. There's no indication of that."

One reason for the high first-quarter B.C. figures is a carryover of starts from the end of 1979, when a number of capital cost allowance applications under the Multi-Unit Residential Building (MURB) scheme were approved. However, the units were not started until January and February.

Also a factor was the B.C. government's injection of $200 million into the residential mortgage field. Mortgages became available at 9 3-4 per cent and one of the conditions was that construction of the houses had to start after Jan. 15 and be finished by Dec. 31 of this year.

Housing unit starts in B.C. in the first quarter were up 81 per cent to 7,097 from 3,930 in the first quarter last year.

In the Vancouver area, starts were up 51 per cent to 3,903 from 2,581.

In Greater Victoria, there were 258 housing starts during March, up from 66 in the same month last year.

Substantially more starts were also noyed for the entire quarter locally, withthe 764 starts more than doubling the corresponding figure for 1979.

A judge whose husky son sometimes suffers terrible hunger pangs showed sympathy for a 284-pound man convicted of stealing four steaks from a supermarket. After hearing how the hungry accused fled with the steaks and then threw them back at a store employee who pursued him, Judge Graeme Garson said he could understand the man's plight because of his 16-year-old son's experiences. His son weighs 225 pounds and plays defensive tackle for a junior football team in Winnipeg. "When he gets hungry, he gets terrible pains in his stomach," Garson said. He placed the man on a year's unsupervised probation.

Al Horbay, who catered more than 20,000 banquets, bar mitzvahs, weddings and VIP receptions during 35 years at the Royal York Hotel, has retired. Horbay, 62, was involved with handling food service for every member of visitin g British royalty from King George V to Queen Elizabeth. But the catered affairs that gave him the most difficulty were weddings whose organizers demanded that he cover up the exposed bosoms of two female chariot riders depicted in a ceiling mural. "Don't laugh," says Horbay. "They really meant it."

Nelson

"I stirred up the tea and took a big drink," recalled Harry Friedman on the witness stand. "I felt something funny in my mouth. "I spit it out in my hand. I'm no big expert, but it was some kind of roach. A cockroach, I think. I couldn't go back to work that day, and I had to cancel a weekend trip I'd been planning. You know, they even made me pay for the lunch — and the glass of tea." Nashville judge Gale Robinson awarded $1,000 damages to Friedman, who bought the tea in a restaurant.

Lois Linden of Delcambre, La., says she saw the face of Jesus Christ in her kitchen window screen.

Willie Nelson says it may take him a year to recover but his annual July picnic in Austin, Texas is definitely on. This year's bash will take place July 3, the day after Willie's Honeysuckle Rose film premieres. The picnic will be held on the grounds of Willie's Pedernales country club near lake Travis and Willie says he's expecting some 100,000 friends for the day-long affair — up considerably from 25,000 last year.

Chef Rigollet retains talent

By PAT DUFOUR

Although Victoria master chef Daniel Rigollet no longer follows his profession he can still cook up a storm.

In competition sponsored by the New Zealand Lamb Company in which 115 entries from across Canada were evaluated, Rigollet, of 2664 Heron Street, was one of 10 finalists that took part in the finals, held in Toronto. He lost the championship by a hair — or rather, two-tenths of a point to a teaching instructor at St. Clair College in Windsor.

In his official summing up of Rigollet's performance, the captain of Canada's Olympic cooking team Marcel Kretz, one of the four judges, said "Nice dish — a close winner. Nice combination of flavor — very good sauce— garnish should be mentioned with the recipe."

Rigollet, who is now a sales representatives for Centennial Packers Ltd., was persuaded to share his top-notch recipe with Times readers.

NOISETTE D'AGNEAU FISGARD

2 lamb loins cut in eight round pieces of about 2 inches. Lamb should be boned and well trimmed before being cut.
1½ teaspoons of fresh ginger cut Julienne (in very fine shoe string pieces)
1 teaspoon creamed honey
1 ounce butter, unsalted if possible
¾ teaspoon of finely-chopped shallots
⅓ ounce cognac or brandy
8 ounces 35 per cent cream
1 teaspoon finely-chopped parsley
Salt and pepper.

Season the lamb noisettes and saute in butter in saute pan. When cooked, remove and keep hot. Remove excess butter.

Add shallots and ginger. Do not burn. Cover with the cognac or brandy. Add honey, cream, salt and pepper. Stir.

Bring to a boil. Reduce sauce until nappe (looks like a cream sauce) stage. Adjust seasoning to taste.

Place noisettes on a warm oval platter and cover them with sauce. Sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Although he has been in Canada since 1966, a trace of an accent betrays his French beginnings. His 21 years in the cooking trade began with a three-year apprenticeship at a college in the French town of Tours.

He practised his profession in the Irish city of Cork and the German city of Frankfurt before "being a good Frenchman I served 18 months in the navy," he recalls.

He spent his service time cooking for French naval officers. Understandably, there were no complaints.

His compulsory time in the navy over, Rigollet cooked in Switzerland and Holland before heading for Canada.

In Canada, he first plied his profession in Montreal. This was followed by jobs at the Banff Springs Hotel, Edmonton, and the Empress Hotel in Victoria. He was the chef for the Oak Bay Manor when it opened in the early 1970s and its first chef when the Chateau Victoria opened.

Although he's changed his calling, Rigollet keeps his hand in by occasionally creating culinary delights for his wife Klementia and their two sons, Eric, 10, and seven-year-old Marc.

"I have to keep in touch with it. It's not easy to forget so many years," he says.

While a master chef must know all aspects of the culinary arts, most of them specialize in one or more particular facets. With Rigollet it's sauces and seafoods. In true Gallic charm he's named a favorite for his wife.

SUPREME OF SALMON KLEMENTIA

4 pieces of skinned filet of salmon, 6 to 7 ounces each
2 medium-sized finly-chopped shallots
2½ cups whipping cream
3 ounces French Noilly Pratt vermouth
1 teaspoon finely-chopped parsley
Salt and pepper.

In a shallow pan put the salmon, vermouth, shallots, salt and pepper. Cover. Bring to a boil and then poach for 10 to 15 minutes, depending on the thickness of the salmon.

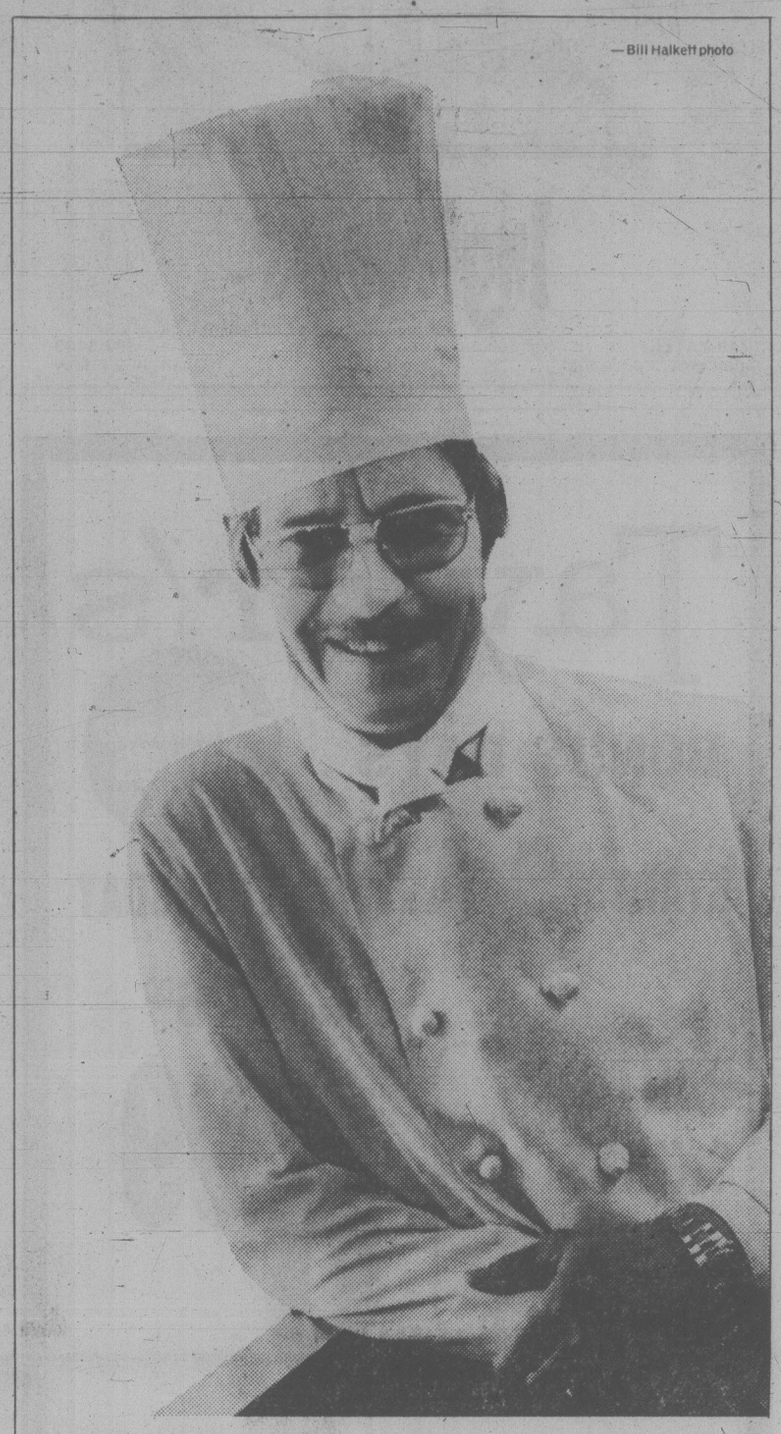

Remove salmon, place on a platter and keep warm in the oven.

Add cream to the stock, bring to a boil, keep stirring until it has reached the nappe (cream sauce) stage.

(Rigollet warns not to cover the sauce because this would cause it to curdle.)

Place salmon on a clean platter, cover salmon with sauce and sprinkle with parsley.

Daniel Rigollet dons chef's whites for competition only

Dear Abby:

I am a 15-year-old girl. My parents were divorced when I was 2, and my mother agreed that my father should have no obligation to her or me. I never saw him again. My mother died six years ago and I have been living with my aunt and uncle. (She's my mother's sister.)

I've always wanted to see my father but I had no idea where he was. I remember my mother saying once that Dad had a brother living in St. Louis, so I got up the nerve to call him on the phone. I told him who I was, and said I didn't want to cause any trouble, but I wanted to get in touch with my father. He said my father was married and had a family--that he'd never told anyone that he had been married before or had a daughter. He refused to give me my father's number or even tell me where he was, but he said if I gave him my number he would give it to my father in case he wanted to call me.

I gave it to him, and didn't hear anything from anybody for five months, so I called my uncle again, and he told me I should quit looking for my father because he didn't want to see me. The aunt and uncle I live with don't know I called my uncle in St. Louis. They would have a fit if they knew because they hate my father. (Everybody on my mother's side does.)

What do you advise me to do? I really want to know my dad.

Looking for Dad

Dear Looking:

Your father has been told where he can reach you, so if he chooses not to get in touch with you, forget him. Perhaps when you are older, you may want to pursue this search, but for the time being, dear, cool it.

Dear Abby:

Invisible Wife shouldn't feel too bad about not being included in two wedding invitations addressed only to her physician husband. At least the guest list was made up by outsiders.

My husband looked me straight in the eye and told me he was attending "a little retirement party" for one of employees (female). I later learned that he had been the host to this $1,000 sit-down dinner at an exclusive hotel. The guest list included several couples we socialize with, plus all his employees, whom I know well.

Abby, I have worked hard and long so that he is now able to afford such things, and imagine the shock when three days later a friend who had attended this "little retirement party" asked if I had been ill and unable to attend. Please comment.

No Frump

Dear No:

I hope you and your husband have other things going because that beats all. If he had any real reason for you not be be there — or even in the know — you should have been made aware of it. In any case, I nominate your husband for "Stinker of the Year."

Advocate takes a (beef) ribbing

By PAT DUFOUR

I must admit when I first met Pat Scarlett I had an "I'm from Missouri" attitude about buying beef.

I'd convinced myself beef was too dear for my blood and was prepared to act as Devil's Advocate for the consumer, Scarlett being a home economist at the Beef Information Centre in Vancouver, which is financed by the Canadian Cattlemen's Association.

She changed my mind after pointing out that one supermarket chain in Victoria had blade roasts on special at 99 cents per pound last week.

So a blade roast is just that. Not so says Scarlett.

Referring to the centre's guide on how to make your beef dollar stretch, she pointed out that cut wisely, a blade roast, if it has a long straight blade bone, can offer you at least four choices of meals.

The meat above the blade bone can be cut away and sliced into steaks for Swiss steak or cut into strips for stroganoff or stir-fry recipes.

The meat just above the chine bone is the most tender. In a first cut blade roast this is the end of the rib eye. Remove the chine bone and divide the remaining meat along the natural seam. These make small rib-eye steaks that are tender and delicious.

The remaining centre part of the roast is the least tender and can be used for stew or rolled and cooked as a pot roast.

Scarlett says we should think of prices as so much per serving, rather than so much per pound. She says a wise shopper will know the cuts and their substitutes, try simple cutting of meat at home, buy specials and control size of portions. She says many people eat much more than the two to three ounces of meat per day recommended in the Canada's Food Guide.

These and other tips are available free by writing Scarlett at 594 Elstree Place, North Vancouver, B.C., V7N 2Y3.

Getting back to the blade roast and the special I missed last week, Scarlett gave me one of her favorite recipes. It's sweet and sour beef stew. She made 100 pounds of it one weekend to hand out at the Pacific National Exhibition and still liked it after the chore was finished, believe it or not.

Here's the recipe:-

SWEET AND SOUR BEEF STEW

¼ cup all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon salt
Dash of pepper
2 pounds stewing beef cut into 1 inch pieces
¼ cup cooking oil
¾ cup water
½ cup ketchup
¼ cup light brown sugar
¼ cup vinegar
1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
1 teaspoon salt
1 large onion, chopped
4 or 5 medium carrots, cut into ½ inch slices.

Combine flour, first teaspoon of salt and pepper. Coat the meat with the flour mixture. Brown meat on all sides in hot oil.

Combine water, ketchup, brown sugar, vinegar, Worcestershire sauce and the second teaspoon of salt.

Stir into the browned meat, add onion. Cover and cook over low heat for about 45 minutes, stirring once or twice.

Add carrots and cook another 45 minutes on low heat or until carrots and meat are tender. Serves six.

As for the Swiss steaks, Scarlett recommends trying this recipe:-

SWISS STEAK

1 pound boneless blade
2 tablespoons flour
1 teaspoon seasoned salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
1 tablespoon oil
¼ teaspoon dry mustard
½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
¼ cup brown sugar
½ cup ketchup
1 onion, sliced.

Pound flour into steak. Add salt and pepper and brown on both sides in oil. Drain off oil.

Mix mustard, Worcestershire sauce, brown sugar, ketchup and one cup of water. Pour mixture over steak, add onion and simmer for 1½ hours or until tender. Serves four.

Scarlett says there is no point in paying for the more expensive lean ground beef in such dishes as this one for a cabbage roll casserole when general ground beef serves just as well. Here's the money-saver:-

CABBAGE ROLL CASSEROLE

1 pound regular ground beef
1 chopped onion
1 teaspoon salt
Pepper
Garlic powder to taste
1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
1 10-ounce can tomato soup
1 cup water
3 tablespoons rice
3 cups coarsely shredded cabbage
Grated cheese or cheese slices.

Brown ground beef. Add onions, salt, pepper, garlic powder and Worcestershire sauce and cook until golden. Drain off excess fat.

Add soup, water and rice and mix. Place cabbage in a casserole. Pour meat mixture over cabbage and top with grated cheese or cheese slices.

Cover and bake for 1½ hours at 325 degrees.

Don't take that nosebleed lying down

By Dr. L.L. COLEMAN

"Nosebleeds can be stopped by pressing a penny over the lip and applying ice to the back of the neck."

This has no validity. Most nosebleeds are the result of a broken blood vessel in the wall of the nasal septum. The bleeding point is about one half inch into the nose. Occasionally, the bleeding comes from a larger blood vessel deep inside the nose. This is the one that may be broken in people who have severely high blood pressure.

The best way to stop a simple nosebleed is to put a large piece of absorbent cotton into the side of the nose that is bleeding. Then, squeeze the nose for about five minutes. This pressure causes the blood to clot, or coagulate. Leave the cotton in the nose for at least another five minutes. Unless you do this, you will dislocate the clot and start the bleeding all over again.

It is a common fallacy that people with a nosebleed should lie down. This only makes the flow of blood to the nose more active and tends to increase the bleeding. Sitting up straight, on the other hand, diminishes the blood flow to the nose and is more helpful.

Sometimes an ice compress, applied directly to the nose, is soothing, but nothing replaces pressure on the nose for effectiveness in stopping the bleeding.

"Human bites are not as dangerous as animal bites."

This is wrong. There are many bacteria that normally lie in the mouth, especially around the gums and teeth. A human bite that breaks the skin can introduce these germs into the victim and produce active, virulent infections.

Dog bites are normally treated with greater respect than are the bites of humans. Both kinds of bites should be carefully examined and actively treated.

"I don't inhale tobacco, so it can't do me any harm."

Wrong, wrong, wrong. Even though one doesn't inhale, enough of the tars, nicotine and contaminants find their way into the lungs and into the bloodstream to do harm. In addition, the pollution of the smoke itself is irritating to the lining of the lungs and can produce all kinds of pulmonary problems.

Many people delude themselves into believing that filters, low tars and low nicotine are complete protection against the health hazards of tobacco. Nothing is farther from the truth.

Health officials firmly believe that smoking tobacco in any form is one of the greatest threats to health.

'New' dish not possible

the 60-minute gourmet

I am often asked how it could be that after a few decades in the kitchen you can possibly invent another new dish.

The answer in the ultimate sense is — you can't. Almost any "new" dish that comes off the stove is simply a variation of rules of cookery that have been set down or known from a couple of centuries back. A good case in point is the dish that I am about to outline here, chicken with tarragon sauce.

There are many ways to prepare a dish that could bear this name. You may saute your chickens with their tarragon flavor, adding a little wine and or water at the end and the sauce would be a brown sauce. You could make a fricassee of chicken using tarragon as the principal flavor. And, as I have done here, you can use Cornish game hens, simply roasted with tarragon flavor and, at the last moment, add just enough heavy cream so that the "white" sauce that results will coat the chickens.

I think there are three reasons why I have such a high regard for the Cornish game hens in this country. They are the closest approximation that you can find — coast to coast — to the poussins or small chickens of France. It is also true that the quality of the small birds (if you select the best brands and buy them unfrozen) is often superior to that of larger birds to be found in supermarkets. And there is no denying that they are excellent for cookery that is to be done in less than 60 minutes.

I am a great advocate of not wasting foods, and to that end I have used here the livers of the chickens to prepare what I consider the ideal accompaniment for Cornish game hens with tarragon. The livers, along with a few mushrooms, are used to give flavor and texture to a rice dish that is baked at the same temperature and in the same oven alongside the chickens.

POUSSINS A L'ESTRAGON
(Rock Cornish game hens with tarragon cream sauce)

4 Rock Cornish game hens, about three-quarters of a pound each, with giblets reserved.
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.
1¼ teaspoons dried tarragon.
2 tablespoons butter.
3 tablespoons finely chopped shallots
⅓ dry white wine.
½ cup heavy cream.
1 tablespoon finely chopped parsley

1. Preheat oven to 450 degrees.

2. Sprinkle the game hens inside and out with salt and pepper. Add one-quarter teaspoon dried tarragon to the cavity of each bird and truss.

3. Melt the butter in a shallow, metal roasting pan that will hold the hens comfortably, bodies touching. Arrange the hens breast side up in the pan and brush them all over with the butter. Scatter the necks and gizzards around the birds. When the butter starts to sizzle beneath the game hens, transfer the roasting pan to the oven. Bake 15 minutes.

4. Start basting the birds and continue roasting without turning for about 20 minutes.

5. Transfer the game hens to a warm serving platter and cover with foil to keep warm.

6. Spoon out the fat from the roasting pan. Leave the necks and gizzards in the pan. Add the shallots and cook until soft. Add the wine.

7. Cook, stirring to dissolve any brown particles that cling to the bottom and sides of the pan, about 30 seconds. Add any juices that may have accumulated around the chickens.

8. When the wine is reduced by half, add the cream and remaining one-quarter teaspoon tarragon.

9. If desired, transfer the gizzards and necks to the cooked hens. Strain the sauce over the hens. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve.

Yield: 4 servings.

RIZ AUX CHAMPIGNONS ET FOIES DE POUSSIN
Rice with mushrooms and chicken livers)

4 game hen livers.
¼ pound fresh mushrooms, preferably small.
2 tablespoons butter.
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.
½ cup finely chopped onion.
1 cup uncooked rice.
1½ cups fresh or canned chicken broth.
1 bay leaf.

1. Preheat oven to 450 degrees. If you are preparing the game hens with tarragon, the oven will already be heated.

2. Cut the livers into small cubes and set aside.

3. Cut the mushrooms into quarters. There should be about two cups. Set aside.

4. Heat the butter in a saucepan and add the livers. Cook briefly, about 30 seconds, stirring. Add salt and pepper. Add the onion and mushrooms.

5. Cook until the onion wilts. Add the rice and stir to blend ingredients. Add broth and bay leaf. Bring to the boil. Cover and place in the oven alongside the game hens or on another shelf in the same oven. Bake exactly 17 minutes. Remove the bay leaf and serve.

Yield: 4 servings.

Veal dish served many ways

questions & answers

Q. A few weeks ago, I dined on a dish in California called veal Oskar. It was made with a veal chop topped with shrimps and, I believe, a hollandaise sauce. Do you know the origin of the dish's name?

A. There are many versions of veal Oskar. The veal chop is sometimes topped with crawfish and sometimes crabmeat. It almost invariably has asparagus spears as another garnish. And generally speaking, the sauce is a bearnaise and not a hollandaise.

The dish, according to legend, was named for King Oskar of Sweden. He is said to have had a fine eye for the young ladies of his country and would often take them, secretly, to midnight suppers in one small hideaway or another in Stockholm. He was said to have had a special liking for veal, crawfish and asparagus. The chef of one restaurant had the inspiration to combine all these in one dish and the result was veal a la Oskar.

Q. Once in a while I use a few drops of Angostura bitters for cooking as well as for putting in cocktails. Do you know the origin of the name?

A. According to that fine reference work, Tom Stobart's Herbs, Spices and Flavorings (Penguin Books, 1977), Angostura is "the old name for the Venezuelan town on the Orinoco River now called Ciudad Bolivar." It gave its name to the bitters, "which was originally a medicine for fever invented by a Doctor Siegert during the last century." The bitters, he adds, are made with cinnamon, cloves, mace, nutmeg, orange and lemon peels, plus prunes crushed with their pits, quinine and rum.

Q. One of the most curious of garnishes is, to my mind, angelica. Can you tell me what kind of plant produces this herb?

A. Angelica derives from a plant with a thick, hollow stem and it is said to be a member of the parsley family. It has long been used in the preparation of medicines, largely as a digestive.

You are correct that it is used mostly in a candied form (only the tender young stems are used for this purpose) although some sources state that all parts of the plant may be eaten. The leaves are cooked as a vegetable and the first young, tender shoots of the plant are used in salads.

Q. A friend of mine states that the term "mocha" in cookery may be based on coffee flavoring alone. I state that it is always a coffee flavor combined with chocolate. Can you clarify this? And where did the name originate?

A. The word "mocha" can refer to a coffee flavor alone although more often than not, I believe, it refers to coffee plus chocolate.

The name originated from the Yemen port of Mocha now called Al Mukha. The port was at one time a renowned center of the world coffee trade. Mocha is a kind of rich Arabian coffee and the word is used loosely to refer to any kind of very fine coffee.

Q. My neighborhood grocery has begun to stock something called cipollino. They look very much like shallots. Are they the same?

A. My Italian friends inform me that cipolline is applied to several members of the onion family, including chives, scallions, very small onions and shallots.

In his The Food of Italy (Alfred A. Knopf, 1971), Waverley Root refers to two preparations made with cipollino — cipollino in agrodolce, "tiny new spring onions in a thin tomato sauce" containing sugar and vinegar, and cipollino sott'aceto — very small onions — "steeped for at least a week in vinegar perfumed with bay leaf, thyme, cloves, cinnamon, pepper and garlic."

Cooking results given

Nanaimo's Malaspina College stole the show at the culinary arts display put on by the Victoria Academie of Chefs de Cuisine in the Hillside shopping mall.

Instructor George Wagner won the award for the best interpretation of the display's theme, Victoria, City of Flowers and also received the trophy for the best professional entry.

Malaspina College student Loretta Moretto received the award for the best student entry.

Wagner's entry featured blown sugar dogwood flowers in a blown sugar vase with a realistic water pump on the side, made of gum paste.

Loretta created a water mill of chocolate and a blown sugar basket of fruit. Her entry included marzipan strawberries and strawberries topped with French pastries.

Twenty-six professionals from Seattle, up-Island, Victoria and the mainland competed in the competition, which is held every two years. There were about 60 student entries, including some from Camosun College.

Judges were Kurt Adrien of Victoria, Elmo Berlinghof of the Edelweiss Inn in White Rock and Hubert Scheck of the Inn of the Sea at Ladysmith.

Mike Juleff, chef at the Strathcona Hotel, was in charge of arrangements.

Planning and leftovers relief for today's costs

craig claiborne

In the face of adversity — and heaven knows, today's escalating food prices fit that word — it may be more interesting to light a candle, to borrow a cliche, than curse the darkness. Or, as one wit has said, "If you can't stem the tide, grab an oar and start to paddle; you might find that rowing is fun."

I have several recommendations for accommodating your daily meals to the circumstances of today. Chief among them would be foresight in menu planning. Second would be a matter of conservation, which is to say a masterly use of leftovers.

I can direct a shopping cart around a supermarket with the same sort of reverie associated with flaneurs who stroll the banks of the Seine.

I like bargains and, as often as not, for my daily fare I plan my menus accordingly. I can tell you that poultry is today, as it traditionally has been, the least expensive meat. Pork, as it generally is, is the second best bargain.

There is a law, though not a rigid one, of the food marketplace that ingredients purchased in bulk are generally priced lower than those bought in small quantities, and ground meats generally cost less than whole pieces.

One of the most basic concepts for stretching the food dollar involves using what are known as extenders. These are foods — pasta, potatoes and rice — that can be combined with a basic meat ingredient to extend servings.

Obvious examples of this would be meat loaves using rice as an ingredient; macaroni casserole; shepherd's pie, which has a mashed potato topping with a ground meat base...

Two basic start-from-scratch meals were a dinner, the main course of which was pasta with meat sauce (using ground pork, which is fairly inexpensive) and a second dinner with chicken in the pot as an entree. I made both the meat sauce and the simmered chicken in larger quantities than would be necessary for the guests on hand. I did this with the intention of having leftover meat sauce and leftover chicken.

The third evening I prepared an old family favorite, chicken spaghetti, using both the leftover meat sauce and the chicken (pulled from the bones and shredded). With a few additional ingredients — cheese and a cream sauce, neither of which was intolerably costly — we dined well on a third dinner.

You can, of course, with the judicious use of herbs and spices, greatly alter the flavors of leftovers. To a meat sauce you might add beans and the flavor of chili powder to produce a creditable chili con carne. Or the sauce may be thinned a bit with a leftover broth to spoon over another inexpensive dish, a meat loaf, which can be served first hot and then, second time around, cold.

If you have any dish in a cream sauce — chicken, for example — you can extend the leftover portion by adding one or two chopped hard-cooked eggs.

It seems to me that one of the great wastes in most North American kitchens is that most home cooks tend to throw out leftover sauces and oddments.

I do not think that you should necessarily have an old-fashioned stockpot simmering forever on the back burner. There comes a point, where the appetite is concerned, of diminished enthusiasm.

I do recommend that you save all meat broths and stocks, but not simmering forever. Instead, pour them into a clean bowl and cover. Refrigerate until needed. Bring these broths to the boil and add unused excess fresh vegetables and more water or another broth. These can go into a multitude of soups and sauces the day after or the day after that.

When you cook a roast, there will often be a certain amount of jelly left over from the pan juices. Don't discard this. Scrape off all trace of fat and add this to the stockpot that you have kept refrigerated.

Breast meats such as breast of lamb and breast of veal can at times be excellent buys. They are fine for stuffing. And remember that stuffed breast meat, like meat loaves, will help stretch the food budget. While some ingredients, such as ground veal, leeks and mushrooms, listed in the recipes below are often expensive, they are also often available on sale or for lower prices in season.

MEAT SAUCE WITH PORK

8 cups canned, peeled, chopped tomatoes.
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.
2 tablespoons olive oil.
2 pounds very lean ground pork.
¾ cup dry white wine.
¾ cup finely chopped parsley.
3 tablepoons dried basil.
¾ teaspoon dried rosemary.
2 teaspoons marjoram.
½ teaspoon dried hot red pepper flakes.
1 cup beef broth, approximately.

1. Put tomatoes in a saucepan and cook down to six cups, stirring often. Add salt and pepper, set aside.

2. Heat the oil in a fairly shallow heavy-bottom skillet or wide saucepan and add the pork. Cook, stirring and breaking up lumps in the meat with the side of a metal kitchen spoon, until the meat has lost its raw color.

3. Add the wine and cook until most of the wine evaporates. Stir often.

4. Add the parsley, cooked-down tomatoes, salt, pepper, basil, rosemary and marjoram.

5. Cook about 45 minutes. You must stir often from the bottom to prevent sticking. If the sauce becomes too dry, add the beef broth, a little at a time, as needed.

Yield: 6 to 8 servings or enough for 2 pounds of spaghetti.

POULE AU POT (Simmered chicken with vegetables)

1 5-pound chicken.
16 cups water.
2½ cups carrots, trimmed, scraped and cut into 2-inch lengths.
12 small onions, peeled.
1½ cups chopped leeks.
4 turnips, peeled and quartered, 2 cups.
2 green peppers, cored, seeded and cut into quarters.
2 bay leaves.
1½ teaspoons dried thyme.
2 cloves garlic, peeled and left whole.
12 peppercorns.
6 ribs celery, cut into 2-inch lengths.
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.
3 small zucchini, cut into 1-inch lengths.
1½ cups parsnips, peeled and cut into quarters.
⅔ cup uncooked rice (see note).

1. Truss the chicken and put it in a kettle with the water, carrots, onions, leeks, turnips, green peppers, bay leaves, thyme, garlic, peppercorns, celery and salt and pepper.

2. Bring to the boil and cook 45 minutes. Add the zucchini, parsnips and rice and cook 15 minutes.

Yield: 4 or more servings.

Note: If desired the rice may be omitted and the broth used for matzoh ball soup.

BREAST OF VEAL STUFFED WITH MUSHROOMS

1 breast of veal, 5½ to 6 pounds, with a pocket for stuffing.
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.
5 tablespoons butter.
½ pound lean ground veal.
1 cup finely chopped onion.
2 teaspoons finely minced garlic.
1 bay leaf, finely chopped.
1 teaspoon dried thyme.
½ cup finely chopped parsley.
½ pound fresh mushrooms, finely chopped, about 2 cups.
1 cup fresh bread crumbs.
2 eggs, lightly beaten.
1 cup finely chopped celery.
¾ cup carrot rounds.
1 cup coarsely chopped onion.
1 bay leaf.
3 cups canned Italian peeled tomatoes.

1. Preheat the oven to 400 degrees.

2. Run your hand inside the pocket of the breast of veal. If you can expand the pocket by slicing inside the cavity with a sharp knife, do so. This will allow for more filling.

3. Sprinkle the veal inside and out with salt and pepper.

4. Heat two tablespoons of butter in a small skillet and add the ground veal. Cook, stirring and cutting down with the side of a heavy metal kitchen spoon to break up lumps. Add salt and pepper to taste.

5. Add the finely chopped onion, garlic, chopped bay leaf, half the thyme and parsley and cook about five minutes, stirring. Add the mushrooms and cook until they give up their liquid and most of it evaporates.

6. Remove the mixture from the heat and let cool briefly.

7. Add the bread crumbs and eggs. Stir to blend.

8. Stuff the veal with the mixture. Sew up the pocket to retain the filling.

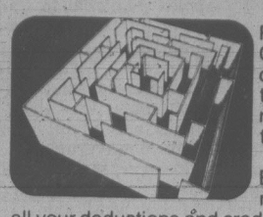

9. Heat the remaining three tablespoons butter in a heavy skillet or roasting pan and add the stuffed veal, skin side down.

10. Place the veal in the oven and bake 15 minutes. Turn the veal skin side up. Bake 15 minutes longer.

11. Scatter the remaining ingredients around the veal. Cover with foil and continue baking about 30 minutes. Let stand 20 minutes before slicing. Remove the trussing string. Serve sliced with the natural sauce in which the veal cooked.

Yield: 6 servings.

Exhibition and Sale of Original Paintings by noted artist

Peter Lee

We are pleased to announce a sale of original paintings by Peter Lee at Eaton's Gallery, second floor of the Home Furnishings Building.

Already well received in Western Canada, Mr. Lee's colorful impressionistic landscapes were accepted in the prestigious Calgary fine arts auction. He has gained wide acceptance in the west.

Originally from China, Mr. Lee has won many honors with the classical, oriental beauty of his landscapes and oriental stills. Since settling in Vancouver, he has turned his attention to the Canadian landscape to the delight of many art lovers. Paintings on display for two weeks.

Apple is our top banana

OTTAWA (CP) — Apples are the favorite fresh fruit of Canadians, a national survey of consumer preferenees shows.

Apples are preferred over oranges by nearly three to one and over bananas by about four to one, the agriculture department report says.

Two-thirds of 2,000 consumers surveyed said that the native McIntosh variety was their favorite.

The consumer survey is part of an eight-phase study called the Canadian apple market development project, says Eric Moore, an agriculture department horticultural marketing specialist.

Moore says that consumers value apples not only for their tastiness, but also their nutritious values.

Oddly enough, the abundance of high-quality apples available to Canadians has in some way caused them to be taken for granted. Last year per-capita consumption of fresh apples was about 30 pounds, only slightly above the 10-year average.

However, Moore expects that rising interest in nutrition will boost apple consumption in the future.

"This survey has helped tell the apple industry what kind of apples the consumer wants, and its results are being taken seriously," he says.

"Growers now know there still is a strong demand for McIntosh apples, and that there is potential for the expansion of other red varieties. There is also a market for green varieties; about 12 per cent of the consumers surveyed preferred this color of apple."

The study also had a message for packers, wholesalers and retailers.

"Consumers said their main criterion for judging an apple is good condition. The apple must be firm and crisp, with a good taste and fresh appearance. These factors were more important to consumers than color or price."

More than half those surveyed said they would prefer to buy Canadian apples rather than imported varieties. However, they felt that the present method of retail identification made it difficult to tell where an apple was produced.

"And many consumers believed that words such as 'fancy,' 'Extra Fancy,' and 'Choice,' are merely advertising slang, whereas in fact they are rigorously defined standards."

Ready-clean fish caught

PICKSTOWN, S.D. (UPI) — The South Dakota Game, Fish and Parks Department says one lucky fishermen recently came up with a catch already cleaned, canned and ready to eat.

The department said Sunday that Steve Banks of Fairfax, S.D., was drifting for walleyes on the Missouri River below the Ft. Randall Dan when he thought he had a strike. But when Banks reeled in his catch it was a can of sardines.

Use This Home Recipe Plan to Lose Ugly Fat

It's simple how quickly one may lose pounds of bulky unsightly fat right in your own home. Use this recipe plan yourself. It's easy — no trouble at all and costs little. Just go to your drug store and ask for four ounces of Naran. Pour this into a pint bottle and add enough grapefruit juice to fill the bottle. Take two tablespoons full twice a day and follow the Naran plan.

If your first purchase does not show you the simple, easy way to lose bulky fat and help regain slender more graceful curves; if reducible pounds and inches of excess fat don't seem to disappear almost like magic from neck, chin, arms, bust, abdomen, hips, calves and ankles just return the empty bottle for your money back. Follow the easy way endorsed by many who have tried this plan and help bring back alluring curves and graceful slenderness. Note how quickly bloat disappears — how much better you feel. More alive, youthful appearing and active.

Halfway mark is here and we've all survived your partner's cookbook

By MIKE McGRADY

Well gang, here we are at the halfway mark. The faithful reader has now cooked 26 complete meals — working his way slowly from spaghetti to spanakopita — and there are just 26 meals to go. The moment seems right for a little pep talk, a little half-time chat with the guys in the locker room.

We can do it gang. Oh, I know it hasn't been easy. I know the curry wasn't perfect and I heard what happened when you tried to light up the steak Diane. And, hey, I'm sorry about the family's reaction when they discovered that steak tartare meant raw meat. But listen, no one ever told you that this was going to be easy, that life is just a bowl of chicken teriyaki.

As we begin the second half, I don't want to see anyone letting up. When the going gets tough, the tough gets going. And remember what lies off there in the distance. Crepes Suzettes. Come on, gang, let's win this one for the little lady!

The Staples: Make sure these are all on hand: Flour, salt, pepper, tarragon, lemons, butter, garlic, dill, milk, double-acting baking powder, lemon extract, vanilla, sugar, vinegar, salad oil.

The Shopping List: Four to five pounds of broiling chicken, cut into small pieces; one bunch parsley; one bunch chives; a dozen eggs; two large onions; one head lettuce; rice; cake flour; small container sour cream.

The main difficulty tonight is going to be an overcrowded oven; three of the dishes require the use of an oven. Two of them — the chicken and rice — can be baked simultaneously. But the cake should be baked in advance.

Prepare in Advance: The pound cake. Preheat oven to 325 degrees. Allow three sticks of butter to soften outside the refrigerator.

We're going to have to use an electric beater on this one. Cut the butter into pieces and add a cup of sugar. Beat the butter and sugar together and then add two more cups of sugar, one cup at a time. Beat together until they form a mixture that is light and fluffy.

You'll be using eight eggs for the cake. Add the eggs to the mixture, one egg at a time, beating it in before going on to the next egg.

In another bowl, stir together four cups of cake flour with a large pinch of salt and four level teaspoons of double-acting baking powder. Stir this into the other mixture along with the small container of sour cream, a teaspoon of lemon extract and a teaspoon of vanilla. Stir this together just until it is well mixed.

Take two 9x5-inch loaf pans, the kind that would be used for bread, and butter it. The easiest way to do this is to take a tiny piece of paper towel, dip it in soft butter and rub this over the inside of the loaf pan. Dust the buttered surface with cake flour and then pour in the batter.

The baking time may vary somewhat according to the thickness of the cake. Bake it for an hour and then test it for doneness. The way to do this: Insert a toothpick into the centre of the cake; if it comes out clean, the cake is ready. After about 15 minutes, remove the cake from the pan.

The rest of tonight's dinner will present no great problem to the half-time veteran. By now we all realize there's no great trick to cooking chicken, whether you broil it or bake it. This is all you really need to know about baking chicken: Use plenty of butter, plenty of lemon and almost any spice on the shelf — rosemary, tarragon, marjoram or thyme.

5 p.m.: Preheat oven to 275 degrees. Begin with a brown paper bag. Into the bag put a cup of regular flour. A small handful of tarragon, either fresh or dried. Half a bunch of parsley, chopped fine. A handful of chives, also chopped fine. A generous amount of salt and pepper. Now the chicken, cut into small pieces, is added. The bag is shaken until all the chicken pieces are coated with the flour and seasonings.

Lay the chicken in a shallow baking dish and dot each piece with butter. Sprinkle lemon juice over all and cover with metal foil. Place in oven. Every 20 minutes or so, spoon the drippings over the chicken.

5:15 p.m.: Cooke one cup of dry rice according to the directions on the box. In a separate frying pan, melt a chunk of butter over medium heat. Add one large onion, chopped, and cook until soft.

When the rice is ready, stir in the onion and the rest of the parsley, chopped fine. Also: two beaten eggs and a half-cup of milk. Butter an oven-proof casserole dish and put the rice mixture into it.

5:50 p.m.: Increase oven heat to 325 degrees. Remove foil from the chicken. Put the rice casserole on another oven shelf.

6:15 p.m.: All that remains is to put together a little salad. Tonight it will be just a head of lettuce, rinsed, dried with a paper towel and broken into bite-sized pieces. Add a simple dressing — one part of vinegar, four parts of oil, a little minced garlic, a dash of dill and some salt and pepper.

6:30 p.m.: All right, gang, time's up. You know what you've got to do now. You've got to get the chicken and the rice from the oven. You've got to pour the dressing over the salad. The rest of it? Hey, this one's going to be a piece of cake.

Est! steeped in legend

wine talk

By TERRY ROBARDS

One of the more curious legends in the world of wine centers on the village of Montefiascone not far from Rome and the fine white table wine produced there under the unusual name of Est! Est! Est! The exclamation points are an important part of the name, for they connote the enthusiasm of the man who made the wine famous, a German bishop called Johann Fugger.

It seems that Fugger was en route from Augsburg to Rome in the year 1110 to attend the coronation of Emperor Henry V. Such a journey in that unmechanized era was a grand undertaking, replete with an entourage of servants and beasts of burden to assure the Bishop of maxiumum comfort and safety.

Dining on the proper foods and quaffing the best wines were important to the bishop, a man of Lucullan tastes, so he dispatched a scout ahead each day to sample the fare on his behalf at the local inns and identify the best stopping place for the night.

The scout, named Martin, was ordered to write "Est," meaning "It is," in chalk on the door of each inn where he found the food and especially the wine acceptable. When Martin came to Montefiascone, he became so enraptured with the local white wine that, in a moment of rash abandon, he scrawled the word on the door three times, with exclamation points.

Apparently Martin's tastes were thoroughly reliable, for Fugger also fell so completely in love with the wine that he never made it to the coronation in Rome, scarcely 60 miles away. He and Martin spent the rest of their lives at the inn in Montefiascone, scarfing down the wine in such quantities that the local people eventually erected a monument in the bishop's memory.

Bishop Fugger willed his estate to the townspeople on the condition that a barrel of the wine be poured over his grave each year on the anniversary of his death. The terms of the bequest were later modified by a church edict to enable the wine to be donated to the local seminary. To this day it is called Est! Est! Est! and it is shipped to markets all over the world. In Victoria, it is available on liquor board shelves at $4.20 a bottle.

Individuals can prescribe their own diet 'medicines'

hilda beastall

Maintaining good health is primarily one's own responsibility today, as it was in pioneer days when doctors were scattered thinly in the developing areas of Canada.

The difference today is that much more information regarding the needs of healthy persons is available to anyone interested. And who is not interested in maintaining health?

When illness or accident occurs, there is necessity to seek professional aid but we should not regard health care to be a right which relieves us, as individuals, of the responsibility both of maintaining the health we have and of avoiding or preventing accidents.

The writer Lin Yutang pointed out in The Importance of Living (1938) that the Chinese language draws no line between food and medicine; "what is good for the body is medicine and at the same time it is food."

Milk in the daily diet of North Americans has received as much publicity from government nutritionists as have fruits and vegetables in recent years but does every homemaker realize that milk products come under the term "milk"?

It is unfortunate that many people do not place items such as hard cheese, yogurt and cottage cheese on a level with milk. They are found in the dairy shelves of the markets but are not labelled as "milk." But they are of course made from milk.

In some families there is difficulty in getting youngsters to drink milk because father will not drink milk. Food habits are easily picked up in early years from parents. Quite as often the homemaker, if the mother of the family, never thinks of drinking milk herself because "it is fattening." Perhaps explaining that other foods are also milk would help.

There is fat in milk to be sure; but it is at an acceptable level for most people and it also contains vitamins and minerals in proportions considered necessary. There is also skim milk as a liquid with lower fat content, or much more cheaply to buy as instant or non-instant skim milk powder This is one of the cheaper sources of protein available to all income brackets of households. Most brands have vitamin A and vitamin D added to replace that which is lost in dehydration and the removal of fat.

Some milk products such as cottage cheese, either full fat or low fat, and yogurt in the same two grades of low fat and full fat, are made at home by homemakers with the incentive and the ability to make the time needed to save money on these healthful items.

Yogurt is easy to make at home as indicated in my own frequently published recipe for low fat yogurt.

Most available commercially and good for daily use are Cheddar cheese in its bulk form, plain yogurt without flavoring or coloring, dry cottage cheese, butter and buttermilk — all are milk products. All except the dry cottage cheese contain the fat of the whole milk; yogurt made at home can have a low fat content by using powdered skim milk for three-quarters of the total liquid.

With thought in planning meals, each meal contains the essentials of milk in some form yet need be neither elaborate nor expensive even with the recent increases in powdered milk and other milk products.

A 35-year-old cookbook put out by a canned milk company before the end of World War Two is filled as might be expected with methods to use milk as a protein extender.

In that period of meat rationing in Canada (allowances were low by today's consumption figures) I recall few if any complaints about the shortage of meat; we turned to other good souces of nutrition, enjoyed them, and probably ate a lot less than today while certainly doning more hours of active work.

This recipe book turned up at a used book sale a few years ago, and has been of interest for its fine ideas for meatless meals using cheese, eggs, the more common vegetables; and small amounts of meat extended by other foods to increase protein, mineral and calory levels.

Here is an appetizing supper dish easily adjusted for 8 or for 2 servings. Make it when using the oven heat for other baking to save on energy fuel.

CHEESE BAKE

4 slices wholewheat bread
softned margarine
2 mL finely chopped chives
15 mL wheat germ
4 small eggs (or 3 medium)
2 mL salt
175 mL skim milk powder
250 mL hot water
125 mL grated Cheddar cheese
dry mustard, paprika

Spread each slice of bread with softened margarine; sprinkle with chives and wheat germ. Place two slices in bottom of greased 15 by 25 cms baking dish. Spread with half the grated cheese; sprinkle with mustard and paprika.

Place next two slices of prepared bread over first two; layer the cheese, sprinkle with mustard and paprika.

Add hot water to milk powder; beat in the eggs and pour while hot over the bread. Let stand 15 minutes.

Preheat oven to moderate 177 deg.C. Bake 20 minutes; turn off oven if not using for further baking. Leave dish in for 10 minutes more.

Custard will then be set and top lightly browned.

Use with cooked frozen peas or carrots and green vegetable. Serves 4. Slices cold next day are good with salad for lunch or supper.

Scalloped Potatoes are an old favorite yet not often seen today. They have the additional protein of milk, and in the following recipe, of sweet corn which can be omitted, and a little grated cheese.

SCALLOPED POTATOES

3 medium potatoes, peeled and sliced
100 mL water
125 mL skim milk powder
1 medium onion OR 15 mL chopped chives
salt and pepper
125 ml canned sweet corn (optional)
wholewheat bread crumbs
15 mL wheat germ
15 mL grated cheese

In medium-sized greased casserole, layer sliced raw potato and onion, and sweet corn (if used). Pour the milk powder and water over all.

Top with breadcrumbs, wheat germ, and sprinkle with cheese.

Bake in moderate oven 177 deg.C for 50 minutes; test potatoes with fork; then turn off heat if no other baking in oven, and leave in for 10 minutes more.

Cooked beets and steamed cabbage makes this a good supper for three or four, and satisfying for replacing energy for active people.

These and many other meals can be made with milk products using part of the daily milk allowance required by most people. So don't think only in terms of glasses of liquid milk when you are advised to "drink milk"; milk products are also milk.

NOTE: With metric recipes use your metric measuring cup and set of spoons; then simply follow the metric amounts. No conversion needed!

Before the judge

Judge Lorne Pearce handed a 17-year-old youth a one-year jail sentence Tuesday in Victoria provincial court for trafficking in a restricted drug.

Michael Thomas Lambert, no fixed address, pleaded guilty to trafficking in LSD and possession of hashish.

Crown counsel Martha McNeely said Lambert was seen selling two "hits" of LSD for $5 each shortly after 8 p.m., Feb. 2 in the 1300-block Langley.

Lambert was convicted Feb. 8 of this year for possession of a narcotic and fined $200, and was convicted seven days later for two counts of trafficking in a narcotic and possession of a prohibited weapon, getting concurrent sentences of six months and one month, respectively.

Pearce issued the one-year sentence on the trafficking charge and a concurrent, one-month term with a year's probation for the possession charge. Police found a baggie containing two cubes of hashish under one of Lambert's armpits during a search.

A 19-year-old youth was given a nine-month jail term and a year's probation for a Feb. 17 break-in.

Steven Martin Bernard, 323 Conway, was convicted of a break-in at 144 Olive.

Bernard had a conviction in 1977 in Toronto for breaking and entering, receiving a suspended sentence and two years probation. He was also convicted Oct. 25, 1978, also in Toronto, of dangerous driving and was given another suspended sentence and 18 months probation. In addition he was convicted Sept. 13, 1979, in Toronto of carrying a concealed weapon and theft under $200, getting consecutive 10-day sentences.

Judge Blake Allan gave a 12-day jail term to a 31-year-old man who admitted kicking in the glass door of the apartment block where he lived.

Frank Allan Donnelly, 230 Oswego, pleaded guilty to mischief causing wilful damage.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan told the court Donnelly returned Monday afternoon to his apartment where his parents were the caretakers and he was the assistant caretaker for the past 2½ years.

Donnelly didn't have a key, Mulligan said, because he was prone to losing it and gained entry through the front door by kicking in the glass and crawling through. Victoria police found him passed out on the stairwell.

Duty legal aid lawyer Steven Kelliher told the court Donnelly was highly intoxicated at the time and only remembered the breaking glass.

A 32-year-old Saanich man was given a 14-day jail term after Pearce found him guilty of having care and control of a vehicle while having a blood-alcohol reading over .08 and failing to remain at the scene of an accident.

Richard William Pearsall, 3800 Quadra, was given 14- and one-day sentences, respectively.

Pearsall was seen shortly after 5 p.m. Oct. 27 in the Westwind Hotel parking lot, 741 Goldstream. Witnesses saw him hit a legally-parked vehicle belonging to a Victoria police officer and attempt to leave. Pearsall was advised by one of the witnesses to leave his name and other information on the windshield of the hit vehicle. Pearsall assured the witness he would, but left without doing so.

Police located Pearsall at home about an hour later and two subsequent breath test readings of .24 were obtained.

Crown counsel N.K. Varma said Pearsall was convicted of a drinking-driving offence in 1975.

Fined $500 for impaired driving was Albert Henry Marsh, 46, of 252 Gorge Road East.

Addicts are punished, not cured, says lawyer

VANCOUVER (CP) — The intent of the provincial government's Heroin Treatment Act is to punish addicts, not to cure them of their dependency, a lawyer argued Tuesday in the B.C. Court of Appeal.

Ron Stern was replying to a submission by lawyer Boyd Ferris, for the province, who contended that the act, as health legislation, is within provincial jurisdiction.

Stern said the primary purpose of the provincial act was to get addicts off the street. He said the so-called health aspect of the legislation was a guise to enable the province to invade the field of criminal law.

Five judges of the appeal court are being asked to determine whether the provincial government, by enacting the 1978 Heroin Treatment Act, invaded the federal government's jurisdiction.

Chief Justice Allan McEachern of the B.C. Supreme Court, whose decision is the subject of the appeal, held last October that legislation requiring addicts to undergo treatment at Brannen Lake near Nanaimo is beyond the power of the province.

The chief justice ruled that the provincial act, which made addicts liable to detention, invaded the criminal field and conflicted with the federal Narcotic Control Act.

His decision, which placed the legislation in limbo pending the appeal, concerned a test case in which Brenda Ruth Schneider, a former addict, challenged the constitutional validity of the act.

Ferris argued Tuesday that a provincial health law requiring the forcible treatment of heroin addicts can co-exist, constitutionally, with federal jurisdiction over criminal involvement with narcotics.

He said the provincial legislation, without attempting to invade federal jurisdiction over such substances, is concerned only with providing health care for addicts.

Cavalcade of Sea in Sidney

An event billed as the Sidney Sea Cavalcade is being organized for August 17 by the Sidney Lions Club.

The day-long festivities will include events such as a joust on Boston whalers, a children's fishing derby, a greased pole competition, fireworks and a bicycle race.

Frank Habies, acting chairman of the Lions club committee organizing the event, said the club decided to stage the show because Sidney Days, the community's traditional celebration on July 1, has deteriorated in recent years.

The cavalcade will emphasize family and sea events, Habies said.

But regardless of the competition Sidney Days will proceed much as usual, said Ald. Eleanor Sowerby, one of the organizers of the annual event.

Sidney council gave initial support to the sea cavalcade proposal at its meeting Monday night.

"Most of the events in recent years have been getting away from the family with things like beer gardens," said Habies

"We'd like to encourage families to come out to the cavalcade with a picnic hamper and spend the day."

The Lions Club has agreed to spend $5,000 on the event this year and has already done a considerable amount of organizing.

An 'intangible something' missing from Colette

By AUDREY JOHNSON

I wish the Belfry could have ended its notable season on the promised strength of Arthur Miller's The Price, directed by Don Shipley.

The essence of theatrical effectiveness is to end a book, a play, a story or a season on a strong up-beat. It can be laughter or tears, but either way it should be on a punch-line that leaves a dent in one's consciousness.

Colette — the Colors of Love, the Toronto import currently at The Belfry, can best be described as a pleasant evening in the theatre. It is not one to leave you craving more, or to be a fitting crown to the past six months' achievement.

The book of this new musical by Christopher Covert is a once-over-lightly treatment of romantic encounters in the life of Sidonie-Gabrielle Colette, the fascinating early 20th century French novelist.

The story develops along a single line, through emergence of the free woman; to the ultimate subjugation of the male ethos into a sheltering presence for a sick and aging Colette.

There is good dialogue even though it tends to become at times didactic and a little pretentious. Covert also directs and manipulates the multiple scenes fluently, making good use of the single hot red setting and flipping time pages without confusing us.

Angela Fusco is a disciplined actress who, as Colette, shows us well defined stages of growth. In addition she hasa splendid voice that provides one of the real pleasures of the evening.

What she lacks is what the show as a whole lacks — any conviction of its proper Gallic nature.

This is an intangible something that has nothing to do with such overt ploys as "accent" or gesture; it's a blend of what the writer succeeds in injecting into the script and the echoes which are picked up by the actor and in the direction.

It is a mood, an atmosphere, a light-filtering texture that is nowhere present in this production.

Don Walker provides another excellent singing voice and technical competence but there is little to distinguish the several male roles he performs. Or was this intentional — meant to convey the faceless enemy, the all-men-are-alike theme?

All other female roles, including young Colette, are impersonated by Marie Baron, an actress of considerable piquant charm who came closest to capturing the needed lilt. Her voice has strength but hints at forcing in production.

Barbara Spence-Potter's music is pleasing and highly singable if reminiscent, and her lyrics neatly add point to the dialogue.

Colette plays at Belfry until April 26.

Arts, crafts show set

The annual show and sale of the Saanich Peninsula Arts and Crafts Society will be held May 3-4 at Sanscha Hall, 10 a.m. - 5:30 p.m.

Crafts and paintings done by the 300 members of the society will be exhibited and members will be demonstrating their techniques.

Harry Heine, a leading water color artist, will be the featured guest artist and his daughter Caren Heine will demonstrate watercolor techniques.

Also demonstrating at the show will be: woodcarver Charles Mackie; Peter Shostak, serigraphy; potter Pat Webber; Frances Hunter, weaving techniques; John Agg, enamelling copper and Helen Rogak will be drawing in pastels, graphite and charcoal.

Luncheon and tea will be available and tickets for the show can be purchased at the door for 50 cents.

Two schools team to stage Our Town

A joint presentation of Thornton Wilder's Our Town, by Glenlyon and Norfolk House Schools begins Thursday at Glenlyon, 1701 Beach. There will be additional performances Friday and Saturday, starting at 7:30 p.m.

The Pulitzer Prize winning play that has been a run-away success in theatres and festivals all over North America, has taken its place as a modern American classic.

In three acts, it is the tender-romantic humorous story of the people of Grover's Corners, N.H., paying particular attention to the Gibbs and Webb families and the romance that develops between young George Gibbs and little Emily Webb.

It is a philosophical play of considerable depth and meaning beneath its entertaining surface — an experience that leaves a thoughtful residue.

The technical presentation of Our Town struck a blow at conventional stage settings, permitting the audience simply by the magic of the spoken word to see a whole town, a house interior, a graveyard beyond the town. It was the first such emancipated play and it opened a new world of stagecraft.

The Glenlyon-Norfolk House presentation is directed by Alastair Lindsay Glegg.

Taking part are Rob Sherratt, Paul Buck, Nigel Leach, David Harvey, Roxanne Meakes, Frances Pettit, Bob Cameron, Alison Kemble, David Lurie, Judith Horwood, Philip Spencer, Kaare Hagar, Vanessa Greenbank, Sean Healy, Carol May, Geoffrey Cairns, Heidi Ladd, Rose Vickery, Alex Langran, Colin Gardiner, Blair Robertson, Bradley Greenbank and Adrian Pettyfer.

Tickets may be purchased at Glenlyon in advance or at the door at $3 general, students $2.

Students present classic operas

Senior opera students of the Victoria Conservatory of Music will be appearing in opera workshop productions of Puccini's Suor Angelica and Donizetti's L'Elisir d'Amore, Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

The performances will take place at the Cridge Memorial Hall of the Church of Our Lord, 626 Blanshard.

The abbreviated versions of the two classics are directed by Selena James and William Braun.

Suor Angelica has an all-female cast. It is a tragic story of a young aristocratic woman sent to a convent for a past indiscretion, who is driven to complete despondency and suicide.

In contrast, L'Elisir d'Amore (The Elixir of Love) is a comic love story concerning a wealthy lady farmer, her peasant suitor and his rival, a sergeant in the army. The story's complications arise from the actions of a quack doctor and his "elixir".

Both productions will be sung in English. Featured in the casts are soprano Ingrid Attrot, tenor Richard Margison, mezzo Nancy Holmes and baritone Clifford Ridley.

General admission at the door is $3., students and senior citizens, $1.50.

Tim Leary reappears on stage

TORONTO (CP) — Dr. Timothy Leary, the former Harvard professor who once said that if he had lived 2,000 years ago he would have been crucified, has reappeared in new incarnation — as a stand-up comic.

Leary, to whom a generation of white middle-class youths looked as their leader in the the use of lysergic acid diethylamide — the hallucinogenic drug better known as LSD — has had a life that even Hollywood movie writers could not have invented.

He started his own religion, the philosophy of which seemed to be to get high and stay high. He escaped from a California jail and kept just one step ahead of the law all over the world.

He was arrested in Afghanistan, taken back to the United States and put on $1 million bail. Then when the dust had settled, he said the only hope for mankind lay in space migration.

And now, at 59, he is preparing to step out on the small stage of a Toronto comedy cabaret and do his comedy routine. He did his first show six months ago in Hollywood.

"I was born Irish and I've always tried to see the humor in everything," he says about his new career.

But this is not to say he has given up promoting his ideologies.

Leary said in a recent interview that when he looks back at the 1960s he realizes he was one of the decade's most influential people — which opened him up to a lot of criticism.

The bidding:

Pass	1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠
Pass	2 ♠	Pass	4 ♠

Opening lead — four of clubs.

Let's assume you're declarer at four spades and West leads a club. How should you play the hand? If you finesse the queen of clubs, which seems the natural thing to do, East wins with the king and shifts to the king of hearts, forcing out your ace. You would then be in sad shape and eventually go down one, losing two hearts, a diamond and a club.

You could dismiss the hand by attributing it to bad luck — after all, West could have had the king of clubs. But if you study the situation objectively, you should conclude that the club finesse is the wrong play.

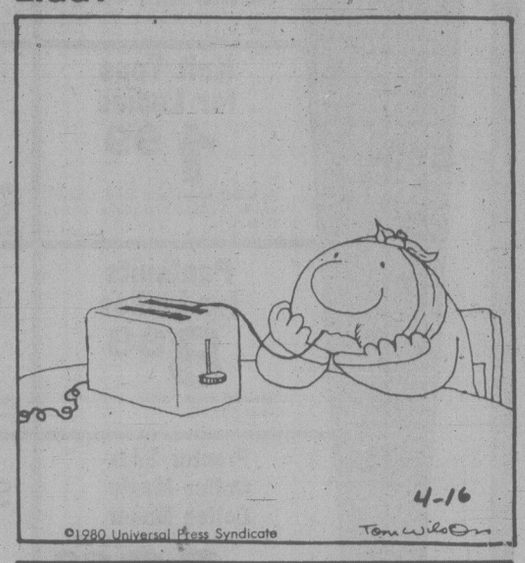

You have a much better chance to make the contract by playing the ace of clubs at trick one and a low diamond at trick two! In the actual hand, you'd eventually make four spades.

The best the enemy could do would be to win the diamond, cash the king of clubs, and shift to a heart. You win, play a diamond to the ace, ruff a diamond high, cash the A-K of trumps, and ruff another diamond high. After playing a trump to the jack, you'd discard a heart on the ten of diamonds and thus score your tenth trick.

Played this way, you make the contract if the trumps are divided 2-2 or 3-1 (90 percent) and the diamonds are divided 3-3 or 4-2 (84 percent). These divisions normally occur much more often than those where West was dealt the king of clubs (50 percent), and it is therefore much better to reject the club finesse.

Notice also that you must play a low diamond from dummy at trick two, not the ace. If you played the ace first, you'd wind up going down one. If you don't believe it, just try it and see what happens.

SOLUTIONS THURSDAY

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Thursday, April 17, 1980
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Locate "missing links." Tie loose ends. Relative may be determined to create friction. Know it and refuse to become inextricably involved in senseless dispute. Humor can be your best defense — and ally. Act accordingly.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Examine financial prospects. Spotlight on income potential, personal possessions, ways to protect valuables. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons figure prominently. A messanger aids in locating what had been lost, missing or stolen.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take initiative in restoring family harmony. Create positive program of diplomacy. Accent on settling financial dispute, purchasing gift which beautifies surroundings and fulfills need of loved one. Taurus, Libra persons figure prominently.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Emphasis on mystery, intrigue, behind scenes activities and visit to special organizations, institutions or hospital. See people as they are, not merely as you wish they might be. Element of deception is present; protect self in emotional clinches.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Imprint style, emphasize creativity, get involved, realize that relationship has intensified. Business venture commands spotlight — added responsibility indicated and also greater chance for reward. You will be compensated for efforts.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Finish what you start — look beyond the immediate, perceive potential. Aries, Libra persons figure in your personal scenario. Define aspirations, bring goal into focus. There is room for you at top. Refuse to be discouraged by envious associate.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Take positive steps aimed at special study, travel and educational plans. Leo, Aquarius individuals figure prominently. Avoid lifting heavy objects. Open lines of communication. Have reference material at hand.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Gain co-operation of one who shares your basic concerns. Accent on employment, health, special services. Intuitive intellect "works overtime." Learn by teaching — definite gain indicated if you follow through on hunch.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Leave details for another time — perceive project in its entirety. Avoid direct confrontations. Accent versatility, social affairs, contacts which can prove invaluable. Gemini, Virgo and another Sagittarian figure in scenario.

CAPRICORN (Dec., 22-Jan. 19): Be meticulous concerning fine points, ultimate goals, references which are required for rounding out project. Obtain valuable hint by studying Scorpio message: One who seemed indifferent could become an ally. Be receptive.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Many restrictions fall by wayside. Know it and prepare for change, variety, travel and project which tests creative capabilities. Young person is very much involved. Relationship is more than a "laughing matter."

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You get on more "solid ground." Family affairs, security, basic issues dominate scenario. Older authority figure aids cause if you so permit. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio persons figure prominently. Be willing to revise, review and rebuild.

IF APRIL 17 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you can be forceful, direct, dynamic and dramatic. You are accustomed to handling responsibility and you respond well during times of emergency. Capricorn, Cancer persons play important roles in your life. Travel indicated this year and social life accelerates. You will have numerous opportunities; key is to be selective.

The sun has all but set on the British Empire

By JOHN ORGAN

LONDON (Reuter) — The last remnants of the British Empire shrink this week to a score of tiny territories scattered around the world.

The Union Jack will be lowered Thursday night in Rhodesia, Britain's last colony in Africa, which becomes the independent multi-racial state of Zimbabwe.

Britain already has unburdened itself of history's largest empire. In the not-too-distant past maps of the world were about 25 per cent red, marking an empire over which the sun was never supposed to set.

British rule in India ended in 1947, and other imperial possessions in Asia and Africa followed suit.

Rhodesia was the biggest headache in the winding down of the empire because its 250,000 white settlers refused to follow what former prime minister Harold MacMillan called "the wind of change."

Now they have bowed to the inevitable.

Meanwhile, Britain is left with a score of dependent territories which, for various reasons, have been unable to cut themselves from the imperial apron strings. These remnants of empire stretch from the Mediterranean rock fortress of Gibraltar to Hong Kong on the coast of southern China.

The Union Jack has flown over the escarpment of Gibraltar since 1704. It was one of the naval bases from which Britannia ruled the waves at the height of the empire.

Gibraltar can never become independent. Britain captured it during the confused Wars of Succession, and under the 1713 treaty of Utrecht it must revert to Spain if Britain gives it up.

Britain and Spain decided this month to resume negotiations on the future of the colony after Madrid agreed to lift frontier restrictions imposed by the late dictator, Gen. Francisco Franco.

But Britain has made clear it will not transfer sovereignty without the consent of Gibraltar's inhabitants. They draped themselves in Union Jacks during a 1967 referendum, and decided against such a future by 12,138 votes to 44.

Echoes of the Gibraltar dispute can be heard far away in the southern Atlantic where Argentina claims another British colony, the Falkland (or Malvinas) Islands.

The 2,000 inhabitants of the Falklands, mostly sheep farmers of British descent, do not want Argentine sovereignty, and Britain has promised this will not happen without their consent.

Britain's last colony on the Latin American mainland is Belize. Its 150,000 inhabitants would have become independent long ago but for neighboring Guatemala's claims to a large part of its territory. Britain has sent troops to the little land of swamps, rain forests and mountains.

Bermuda is still Britain's oldest colony, first settled in 1609. But following riots by black youths in 1977, there have been suggestions that it should consider the road to independence.

Britain still has some little dependencies scattered across the Pacific, but these are being pushed along the road to independence.

Typical was the most far-flung outpost of the near-vanished empire, the Gilbert Islands, which received independence as Kiribati last July in an acrimonious atmosphere which recalled, on a small scale, some of the squabbling which accompanied the dismantling of larger segments of the empire.

Another British colony in the Pacific is Pitcairn Island, occupied by mutineers from the Royal Navy ship Bounty in 1790.

The wealthiest of Britain's remaining colonies is Hong Kong. In theory, its future is doubtful. The British government's lease on the so-called new territories on the Chinese mainland, which provide essential living space and fresh water supplies for Hong Kong island, expires in 1997. But no one really believes the Chinese will march across the border when the lease expires.

Peking has never recognized the treaty under which the new territories were originally leased to Britain. And more than a third of China's foreign exchange earnings come via Hong Kong.

Despite its ambiguous legal status, Hong Kong may survive to become the last remnant of the empire, with its gun still firing at noon as commemorated in Noel Coward's song about mad dogs and Englishmen going out in the noon-day sun.

Mulatto peck for star of show

SALISBURY (UPI) — A young mulatto girl stretched across a fence to give Prince Charles a quick kiss on the cheek today upon his his arrival to turn Africa's last white colony into an independent Zimbabwe under black majority rule.

The shapely young woman was among about 5,000 people crowded along the walls of the city hall grounds to catch a glimpse of the 31-year-old bachelor at his first official stop.

As Charles walked along the wall shaking the outstretched hands, she thrust her head forward to give him a quick peck.

The prince's VC-10 jetliner's arrival touched off three days of hectic independence celebration.

Charles was met by President Canaan Banana, Prime Minister Robert Mugabe and a group of other military and civilian officials. Cannons boomed a 21-gun salute and a police band struck up "God Save The Queen," as four Hawker Hunter jet fighter-bombers zoomed overhead.

Schoolchildren and undulating African women in traditional dress waved flags on the balconies.

Mrs. Connie Leach, 68, who spent almost three hours at the city hall waiting to catch sight of the prince in his white naval uniform.

"Charles, I love you," the white matron shouted when he shook her hand. "He is gorgeous, just lovely. I will never wash my hand again."

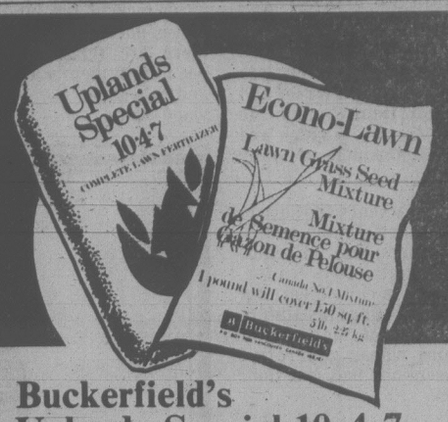

Police mounted a major security operation to provide the prince with protection. Gigantic traffic jams formed around the airport because of police blockades.

Thousands of predominantly black Rhodesians took time off from work to watch the motorcade whip into the city along streets festooned with flags and bunting.

The dignitaries expected to witness the birth of Africa's newest nation included India's Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua, British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington and a three-man Soviet delegation led by Sharaf Rashidov, alternate member of the ruling Politiburo.

Inflation steals Carter's million

BRUSHA BRUSHA? No, Sheik the camel's trying to eat those bristles. Gus Scaran of Newport, Del., has three pet camels and they all live up to their specie's reputation for eating everything in sight.

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — President Carter has lost his status as a millionaire.

Like almost all other Americans, he was hurt by inflation and financial problems caused by the uncertain economy last year.

His net worth of $1,000,910 in 1978 dropped to $893,304 in 1979, a loss of more than 10 per cent.

Carter's financial situation was disclosed in a statement of his net worth and a copy of his latest tax return released by the White House Tuesday.

It has become standard practice for U.S. presidents to put their financial affairs on the public record ever since the Watergate scandals during the administration of former President Richard Nixon, who resigned in 1974.

Most of the financial setbacks Carter suffered last year resulted from losses in a trust of his personal assets held by Charles Kirbo, an Atlanta lawyer and close friend.

President Carter's total income last year was $275,136. This included his regular salary of $200,000, part of a $50,000 entertainment allowance he did not spend but on which he paid tax, $22,670 in interest, and $8,081 in dividends.

After deducting a loss of almost $80,000 in the trust, Carter's adjusted gross income was $195,527. Further deductions for charitable contributions, interest payments and other items cut his taxable income to $150,733.

Pile o' money for 'palimony'

MIAMI (AP) — A Miami man has agreed to pay his former live-in girlfriend $245,000 in what may be the largest "palimony" settlement in the United States.

June Schwartz of Elizabeth, N.J., had filed suit against Philip Schwartz, whose last known address was aboard the 19-metre yacht PJS III, docked at the fashionable Jockey Club at Miami.

Philosopher Jean-Paul Sartre dies

New York Times

Jean-Paul Sartre, who influenced two generations of writers and thinkers throughout the world through his existentialist philosophy, died Tuesday in Paris. He was 74 years old.

Long considered among France's reigning intellectuals, Sartre contributed profoundly to the social consciousness of the post-Second World War generation through his leftward political commitments that took him away from his desk and into the streets. He had, moreover, ideas on virtually every subject, which were developed in novels, plays, biographies, essays and tracts.

Sartre's points of view were less heeded (although still respected) in the 1970s as he became a maverick political outsider on the extreme left. His last substantial book was a long, rambling biography of Gustave Flaubert, the 19th-century French novelist. In it Sartre elaborated his own notions of psychology, society, letters and life, but the 2,000-page book provoked only limited interest in literary circles.

SARTRE

Although he was once closely allied with the Communist party, Sartre was for the last 15 or so years an independent revolutionary who spoke more in the accents of Maoism than of Soviet Communism. As an intellectual and a public figure — a man the police disliked to arrest — he used his prestige to defend the rights of ultra-leftist groups to express themselves.

Sartre was scarcely less well-known as a writer and thinker than Simone De Beauvoir, his staunch and close companion of many years.

Twenty years ago Sartre, with Albert Camus and a few others, was an iridescent intellectual leader, virtually a cult object. But in recent times his stature was that of an ancestor figure, whose generative conceptions had lost their force.

Nonetheless, few denied him respect for his continued attempts to live his ideas, often at the cost of ridicule.

Among other things, he permitted himself to be arrested — these arrests did not result in jail terms — for ultraleftist causes; his voice became more strident; and he lectured his fellow thinkers by saying, "The task of the intellectual is not to decide where there are (class) battles but to join them wherever and whenever the people wage them.

"Commitment is an act, not a word."

His sense of commitment precluded homage. For this reason he rejected the Nobel Prize in Literature, awarded him in 1964, on the ground that he did not wish to be "transformed into an institution." He also turned down the Legion of Honor for its bourgeois connotations.

The core of his existentialism was not condemned. Roughly expressed, this suggests that "man makes himself" despite his "contingency" in an "absurd world."

His existentialism, which was nonreligious despite the clerical origins of the philosophy, seemed to express a widespread disillusionment with fixed ideas amid the revolutionary changes that flowed from the Second World War.

Fear killed scaredy-cat?

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — Dinky, a tomcat who scooted up a tree when nearby Mount St. Helens began rumbling and became the subject of national U.S. media attention, is dead.

Even though he had been vaccinated, Dinky had distemper symptoms and his resistance may have been lowered by his traumatic experience, a veterinarian said.

The three-year-old black cat climbed a fir tree near his home in Yale, Wash., shortly before the first eruption of the awakening volcano, and stayed there for nine days until a logger wearing spikes rescued him.

'Dog's burial' for coup victim

MONROVIA, Liberia (UPI) — Soldiers dumped the bodies of former President William Tolbert and 27 others killed in last weekend's coup into a swampy common grave Tuesday and hundreds of Liberians threw rocks at the grave before a bulldozer covered the corpses.

Rifle-wielding troops and police wore handkerchiefs over their faces in the tropical heat as they unceremoniously heaved the decomposing bodies from a dump truck into a water-filled excavation on the edge of Monrovia's Palm Grove Cemetery.

Reporters caught glimpses of heads among the last group of eight, including Tolbert's.

Officials said later that as well as Tolbert, the bodies included the chief of his palace guard, Brig. Gen. Charles Railey, and the commandant of Monrovia's military stockade, a Major Capehart, who had a reputation for beating political prisoners.

The burial was the first indication the death toll in the coup, led by Army Master Sgt. Samuel Doe, stood at 28.

"They bury a president like a dog," said a Liberian bystander.

Carter hails talks on Palestinians

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter, concluding "very constructive" talks with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin, today said Egypt has approved Begin's suggestion for marathon negotiations on Palestinian autonomy.

Speaking at a farewell ceremony following a two-hour meeting with Begin, Carter said Egypt's President Anwar Sadat had approved the talks to be held in Egypt and Israel in an effort to resolve the Palestinian question by the May 26 target date.

"I can say this has been a very constructive and productive talk," Carter said. "We believe we will now have a very concerted effort" on the question of self-rule for the Palestinians who live on the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

"The meetings will be held, at Prime Minister Begin's suggestion, in Egypt and Israel with President Sadat's approval."

"We still have a long way to go to reach the May 26 goal," Carter said, adding, "I believe we have made good progress."

Sadat had suggested during his recent talks with Carter that some of the sessions be held in Washington to speed up an accord.

"We made real progress and all of us will do our utmost to install full autonomy in Judea and Samaria (the West Bank and Gaza) . . . and to ensure Israel's security," Begin said.

Begin's use of the expression "full autonomy" appeared to be a concession to Carter who has used the term repeatedly to remind the Israeli leader of his promises at the time of the Camp David accords.

Begin also indicated that if the May 26 goal was not reached, the negotiations could continue in the future.

Afghanis claim kills

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (UPI) — An Afghan rebel group claims its forces killed 200 Soviet troops in a surprise raid across the Russian border.

A spokesman for the Hizbe Islami rebel group said the Moslem rebels crossed the border near Yangi Kala:

"We left because many of our men were also killed, but we captured three herds of Russian sheep."

Alaskans get paid, not taxed, by gov't

JUNEAU (AP) — While Americans raced to meet the U.S. tax deadline of midnight Tuesday night, Gov. Jay Hammond signed legislation to eliminate Alaska's income tax — and pay Alaskans cash dividends from the state's burgeoning oil wealth.

The state's estimated 400,000 residents will pocket $405 million by the end of the year — $2,000 for the average adult — through tax refunds and the "share-the-oil-wealth" plan.

Thousands more may be pocketed in future years, especially by long-time residents — making the legislation the biggest cash payment law for Alaskans since the $1-billion Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act in 1971.

"Some people call this socialistic," Hammond said. "But it really is very conservative. The idea is to let the public decide how they want to use their money."

Since huge oil deposits were discovered in Alaska, legislators have wrestled with a way to let their constituents benefit directly. A $900-million windfall from the first big lease sale — Prudhoe Bay in 1969 — was spent mostly on public-works projects in what legislators then said was "catch up" after years of inadequate services.

Subsequent oil revenues of less than $1 billion a year were used to continue government services. But now, Alaska expects to receive more than $4 billion in revenues by mid-1981, largely because the price of the state's oil has been tied to Middle East crude, and because of decontrol of domestic oil.

Legislators agreed this week that rather than let politicians and bureaucrats spend it all, the people should be allowed to get some of the money directly and spend it as they wish. Some view it as an endurance reward.

Representative Fred Brown (Dem. Fairbanks) said Alaska's climate is very harsh. "There's no other state that has conditions like this. Partly because of the extreme environment, the cost of living is higher."

Allies bail Turkey

WASHINGTON (WP) — With West Germany and the United States leading the way, the major Western nations Tuesday pledged a total of $1.16 billion in emergency aid to rescue Turkey from threatened economic and political collapse.

Turkey has been plagued by 20 per cent unemployment, 80 per cent inflation, lack of hard currency to pay for oil imports and a wave of political violence that prompted Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel two months ago to appeal for aid. "If we fail to obtain Western support we may become another Afghanistan," he said at the time.

The scope of Western aid package now being put together reflects a major effort to strengthen the strategic country on NATO's southern flank in the wake of regional turmoil generated by Iran developments and the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

Turkey has already received $220 million from the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank is reported close to approving a substantial program loan agreement to the Demirel government.

U.S. officials indicated that the U.S. and other Western allies would try to reschedule Turkish debts in a move that would bring the total worth of Western aid to well over $2 billion.

The United States and West Germany made the largest pledges, $295 million each. Italy pledged $115 million; France, Japan and the European Community $100 million each; other contributors include Britain, Switzerland, Canada and the Netherlands.

CIA recruiting of clergy for intelligence decried

WASHINGTON (AP) — Catholic and Baptist spokesmen asked the U.S. Congress on Tuesday to keep the CIA from recruiting priests, ministers and other clergy as part-time spies.

"The two roles are incompatible," said the Rev. Anthony Bellagamba, testifying on behalf of the U.S. Catholic Mission Council before a House of Representatives intelligence subcommittee.

James Wood, executive director of the Baptist joint committee on public affairs, called the use of clergy for intelligence-gathering "a blatant affront to the separation of church and state."

The House and Senate intelligence committees are considering a wide-ranging national intelligence charter that contains a provision to bar the CIA from disguising agents as clergy, journalists or academic professionals.

The bill would not prohibit paid arrangements with actual members of those professions, however, nor would it bar voluntary exchanges of information — all allowed at present.

Wood said some missionaries overseas might take part in such arrangements out of a "myopic sense of patriotism." He said the practice is dangerous and urged Congress to prevent the CIA's encouraging it.

Mid-1970s revelations about intelligence use of clergy raised suspicions in other countries that have not subsided, he said.

With passage of a bill allowing such activities to continue, Bellagamma said, "our work overseas would certainly be made more difficult if not impossible."

Painting fetches $4.6M

LONDON (AP) — Actress Jennifer Jones paid $4.6 million U.S. at a Sotheby's auction today for a painting by 15th-century Flemish artist Dirk Bouts.

Jones, wife of U.S. millionaire industrialist Norton Simon, outbid Britain's National Gallery for the painting, which depicts the Resurrection of Christ. The National Gallery has a Bouts believed to be a companion piece.

The painting will go to the Norton Simon Museum in California, Miss Jones said.

The record painting price is $5.9 million set in 1970.

Airlines try lottery to cut back losses

By WINSTON WILLIAMS
New York Times

NEW YORK — The battle among U.S. airline marketing departments has taken a curious turn.

The people who brought the traveller supersaver fares, free trips for children and half-fare coupons are now creating less costly ways to lure passengers, a move necessitated by expensive fuel and poor profits.

Lottery games are the latest hot item. The three largest carriers, United Airlines, American Airlines and Trans World Airlines, expect the games to rebuild traffic by inducing passengers to forget gloomy economic expectations and to ignore sharply rising fares.

But demand for air travel has taken an extraordinary drop this year. Passenger traffic in the first quarter was off more than 1 per cent, one of the few year-to-year declines in commercial aviation history.

Profits for the major airlines fell 78 per cent last year, to $231 million, according to Goldman Sachs, as expenses, led by fuel and labor costs, jumped 30 per cent. In the last year, the price of jet fuel alone has risen 110 per cent, to 85 cents a gallon.

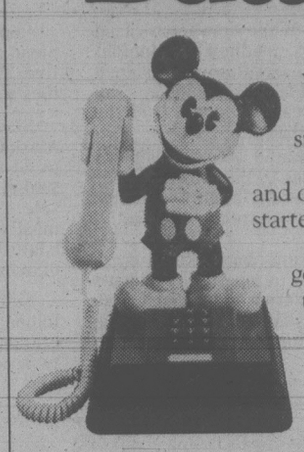

United, the father of the half-fare coupon, kicked off the competition on April Fools Day, 10 days before its rivals, with its "Takeoff" game. Until May 10, United will issue tic-tac-toe type cards to each passenger who boards a United flight. But the game is not limited to United's paying passengers. Anyone can write the airline's agents, daily if so inclined, for a Takeoff game card, a feature that could undermine the airline's goals. United said that half of the two million cards it has given away have gone to write-ins.

Beneath the card's nine silver-shaded squares lurk several different aviation symbols, which are uncovered by scratching the card's surface with a coin. One card in 325 — those with three planes in a row — is a winner and entitles the holder to a free round trip anywhere on United's system between the June 1 and Dec. 15. United expects to give away 15,000 free trips.

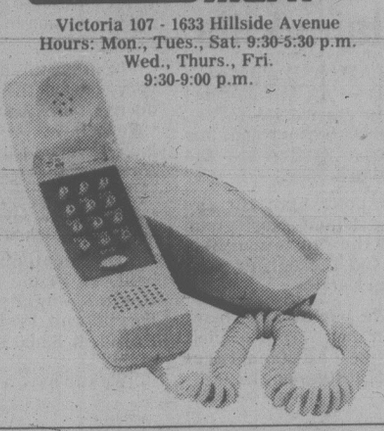

The American and TWA games are variations on the theme.

In all, the three carriers expect to give away more than 35,000 free round trips, which, they expect, will be substantially cheaper than last year's hoopla by American and United with half-fare coupons.

Poor salmon year ahead

VANCOUVER (CP) — West Coast fishermen, still reeling from the loss of the lucrative herring roe season, opened the commercial salmon season Tuesday amid predictions that it also will be one of the worst on record.

The federal fisheries department says that while salmon stocks have been dwindling gradually during the last 30 to 40 years, fewer fish will attempt the arduous journey to their upstream spawning grounds this year than ever before in the last decade.

Fish packing and canning companies say whatever fish are hooked will fetch lower prices than recent years because of a dramatic drop in demand.

Japan, one of B.C.'s major customers, must get 78,000 pounds of last year's frozen salmon off grocery store shelves before buying any of this year's catch.

"It's not going to be a very good year," said fisheries department spokesman Garnet Jones.

"This season is going to be lower than average and the average has been pretty low for the last few years."

In Johnstone Strait, between northern Vancouver Island and the B.C. mainland, only 250,000 salmon are expected to be caught this year. The 10-year average is 400,000.

The only bright spot is Barkley Sound on the west coast of Vancouver Island where the fisheries department is predicting a catch of at least 750,000 fish compared with 679,000 taken in 1976 and the 10-year average of 361,000.

The department blames the shortage primarily on the cyclical nature of the resource, this being the low year of a four-year spawning cycle.

The fishermen's union and the Fisheries Association of B.C., which represents the fish companies, say it has more to do with overlogging of watersheds and pollution, both of which destroy spawning grounds.

The department is also concerned that too many salmon boats are chasing too few fish and may force a reduction in the number of fishing days allowed.

Jones says when 500 seiners and 300 trollers show up for a 50,000 catch, the department's only option is to refuse to open the fishery or to shorten it.

Last year some fisheries in the lower Fraser River were restricted to 12 hours a week, and Jones says it could be even shorter this year.

Another problem facing the 11,000 B.C. fishermen this year is competition from Alaskan fishermen expected to net more fish from the Bristol Bay area of northwestern Alaska than they have since the last century.

"They're looking at a run for Bristol Bay that is 10 times the size of the B.C. market, one of the best since the 1800s," Jones said.

Alaskan fishermen not only have too much fish, they're selling it for less than their Canadian competitors.

Lilacs have a universal appeal

gardening
hilda beastall

Lilacs are in bud. With the normal progress of spring, their perfume will soon be apparent as we walk by gardens even though we may not see the shrub. Similarly with wallflowers, they can be smelled if enough are there, without being seen.

It seems that everyone grew up with lilacs whether they lived in eastern coastal, cold Ontario, frigid Prairies, or on this Pacific coast. They have universal appeal, but are not seen here so often now.

Looking for a reason, I am wondering if we have considered these plants so easy to grow, needing little care, and certainly never harmed by cold or hot temperatures, that we have neglected their needs.

It seems that acid soil and dry summers are two enemies. This points to a lilac which was planted at the back or a bed of azaleas and rhododendrons failing in two to three years. While the rhodos thrived with their peaty acid soil and constantly damp roots, the back portion of the bed may have had scarcely enough water to survive, especially if against a wall or fence.

As new gardens are being made in areas previously treed by oaks or Douglas fir, more gardeners are planting into an acid soil even though it is variable.

In addition to being on the acid side of neutral, the same soil in these newly cleared gardens is likely to be very shallow, with little humus, and is quickly dried out by lack of snowfall seeping in and in dry early spring and summer seasons such as we experience here.

Each year we hear of lilacs failing to make good new growth in summer after the flowering period is over. The owners recall lilacs in other parts of Canada lasting for years without attention. This is why we come to the conclusion that they will do better here if given a deep rich soil as is natural in cultivated areas of Prairie and eastern Canada and supply with artificial watering the frequent heavy rainstorms often accompanied by thunder that are common in the same places.

Our watering here must be on a regular 10-day to two-week interval for established shrubs, and more frequently for newly planted ones.

The deep soil is only possible in most of the Victoria region by digging deeply into clay, removing it, breaking up the bottom; then filling first with rough compost and a few small stones, and on top for at least 50 cms, screened humusy compost, old dried hay or dry grass clippings well mixed. Old cow manure is excellent, for it is bulky and absorbent. One-third of the mixture by volume may be of this manure material. More should be used each early spring as a top dressing over the root area, to hold moisture, prevent drying out and overheating of the root area.

The only other attention needed for lilacs is the thinning of crowded shoots if present, the removal of weak shoots and the removal of each flower truss as the flowers fade. This last step is important on young, newly planted lilacs, but becomes less necessary as the plants grow well. Make this cut above the point where this year's new tender growth can just be seen. If cut below this point there will be no flowers next year. Lilac blooms come on the new wood made the previous summer.

Big bunches of lilac for house decoration can only be cut from large old established shrubs. They can afford to be shortened here and there and will thus make new growth for future years of bloom. Young plants must be given the chance to develop so remove only the old flower heads.

Varieties are many today, in pure white, shades of purple, and even pink. There are singles and doubles. Some are more fragrant than others. All like sunshine, and all need the deep moist, rich soil treatment. Sometimes a species lilac can be obtained locally, with the name Syringa as the rest of the lilacs. These are usually of smaller growth, and have smaller flower clusters, but most have a rich perfume, and fit into small gardens.

It is mainly for their fragrance that we value lilacs, so see them as they come into bloom at local nurseries and garden centres, or perhaps you have already chosen a known named variety from having enjoyed the fragrance in a garden. Given the extra attention needed, lilacs are long-lived, with color and perfume in spring and generous foliage.

'We'll take 300' Canada tells Peru

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Canada will accept up to 300 Cuban "asylees" of the more than 10,000 camped on the grounds of the Peruvian embassy in Havana, Immigration Minister Lloyd Axworthy announced Tuesday.

Axworthy made the announcement in the Commons, saying the decision was made in response to a request from the Peruvian government for help in resettling the Cubans.

Speaking later to reporters, the minister did not rule out the possibility Canada may accept more than the initial 300 at some point in the future.

Axworthy described the situation at the Peruvian embassy in Cuba as unusual and said Canada's decision was made on humanitarian grounds in light of the severe suffering of the Cubans.

He also said the Cubans do not fall within the strict definition of refugees as set out by the United Nations: They are not being persecuted and they are not being thrown out of their country but they do constitute a group of people who are suffering severely.

He could not say when the first Cubans might arrive in Canada, although he said they would be eligible to borrow money from a special government fund to cover transportation costs for refugees.

That fund, however, is running out of money and Axworthy plans to ask Parliament to approve further funds for the loan program.

The minister made clear that the Cubans will only come to Canada after they have arrived in Peru.

And he said the Canadian government is prepared to send officials to negotiate with the Peruvian government as soon as possible.

The minister also repeated a promise to do a serious review of Canada's refugee program in the next few months aimed at developing a more comprehensive response to the world-wide refugee problem.

Meanwhile, two planes carrying 236 Cuban refugees, some in tears and some shouting "Liberty, liberty," arrived today in Costa Rica — the start of an airlift of nearly 11,000 people who have taken refuge in the Havana embassy.

Stones and obscenities were hurled at them as they left the Cuban capital.

They are the first to leave of the thousands who swarmed into the Havana embassy the week of April 4. Some had their fists in the air as they left the aircraft.

The United States agreed Monday to take 3,500 of the Cubans, who swamped the embassy in a bid for political asylum.

Peruvian newsmen who have been inside the embassy in the last few days said health problems were acute and food was short.

"The state of the children is particularly dramatic" and the smell is perceivable at "a great distance."

Bulldog's bite a cool $438,000

LONDON (AP) — The Bulldog, a one-of-a-kind sumptuous sportster called "the ultimate supercar," will be sold to the highest bidder, at a starting price of $438,000, says Alan Curtis of Aston Martin, the British auto-maker which designed the car.

A gas-powered car with a twin turbo-charged engine, it can reach 160 kilometre an hour in 10.1 seconds, and can do more than 322 km/h.

Gas pipe pact near

WASHINGTON (CP) — A "substantial agreement" has been reached for the first stage of financing the long-delayed Alaskan northern natural gas pipeline, the lieutenant-governor of Alaska said today.

Terry Miller, in Washington for meetings Tuesday with the U.S. sponsor of the pipeline and with producing companies that own the Alaskan North Slope gas to be shipped to the lower 48 states, said the producers have agreed to make substantial investments in advancing the project.

The producing companies — Exxon, Sohio and Atlantic Richfield — will match the $75 million to $100 million that Northwest Energy Co. has already spent on preliminary design and engineering work on the line, Miller said in a telephone interview.

In addition, producers have agreed to match 50-50 the pipeline builder's future costs for phase 1 costs for planning, engineering and construction of the line, up to $500 million.

Miller said the agreement, reached late Tuesday, now is being "reduced to writing" and will be formally signed in Washington on April 25.

The gigantic project, a Canada-U.S. joint effort that was approved by both governments in 1977, has suffered repeated setbacks as estimates of construction costs soared and doubts were raised that the line would ever be built.

The Canadian government has asked for and received assurances from Washington that the Carter administration remains committed to the pipeline project as a vital part of efforts to ease imported oil dependency.

Agreement to bring producers into financing the construction, achieved with the prodding of U.S. energy department officials who set up recent meetings between the sponsors and producing companies, is a major step forward for the project.

Layoffs point to recession

'They had one hell of a night'

VANCOUVER, Wash. (UPI) — One of three men who defied authorities and climbed erupting Mount St. Helens says the climbers briefly lost their nerve near the summit because the volcano let loose with an eruption. But it was too late to turn back.

All they could do was dig into the gooey, half-frozen muck near the lip of the volcano's cone while it shuddered and roared directly over their heads all night, said Otto Sieber, 42.

The group pulled together in the morning and climbed the remaining 244 metres up over the volcano's rim and saw "Dante's Inferno" close up, Sieber said Tuesday in an interview with UPI.

Sieber, Brian Witt, 26, and Andy Sterne, 21, all of Seattle, said they made the 2,949-metre climb during the weekend to film beer commercials.

Above the timberline, the mountain has been officially restricted; persons caught there face a $500 fine and up to six months in jail. The three climbers were not caught and Forest Service officials were discussing whether to press charges.

The actual ascent started at 11 a.m. Saturday.

"We underestimated the difficulties of the climb and were unable to reach the summit (on the first day) largely because of the mud and the ice," Sieber said.

"The (volcanic) ash had settled on the snow on the average of several inches on the upper slopes. It turned into a gooey soup that ran down in rivulets.

"We got about 800 feet from the summit when that eruption occurred just before the sun set Saturday and we lost our nerve and just dug a hole in the side and kept ourselves warm."

U.S. Geological Survey scientists reported that particular eruption blew steam and ash thousands of metres into the air and was clearly visible more than 50 miles away in Portland, Ore.

"We huddled together and survived the night" while the ground shook "kind of like a waterbed effect on the snow and ice," Sieber said.

At first light, they climbed on.

"I'm a (independent) filmmaker. I followed those rock climbers up with my movie camera . . . it was a little more exciting than I bargained for — when you are on a rock ledge 2,743 metres up, you can't go down."

Then they crested the crater's rim "and saw Dante's Inferno. A hell hole is what it really looked like . . . it sounded like a continuous avalanche. Various sides (around the crater) were caving in intermittently."

Sieber said the crater was "like a moon surface on top. There was thick, flying dust and where rocks were falling it was like craters, shellholes — pock-marked all around."

Then the mountain let loose.

"It was like a big explosive charge going off — no muzzle. It did not have a roar, it was popping and cracking. It was like an avalanche sound with firecrackers going off."

Fortunately, the wind carried the debris north, away from the climbers, Sieber said, noting that the "explosions were coming out of the throat" of the volcano.

While staring at the inferno, "It made me very humble," Sieber added. "I'm an agnostic and I almost — it really kind of confirmed the existence of a power greater than us."

He laughed and added: "It makes you think about not wanting to be in hell."

Auto sales sour

DETROIT (UPI) — The normally upbeat spring selling season is turning sour for U.S. automakers, who reported Tuesday that early April sales slumped 24.4 percent below the same period last year.

The gloomy report meant the industry's year-long slump is continuing without letup.

Sales of domestic cars in the April 1-10 period reached 184,788 units, down 24.4 percent on a daily selling basis from 217,290 in the same period last year. There were nine selling days in the period this year and eight last year.

All domestic automakers had sales declines except for Volkswagen of America, which managed to hold steady with last year's levels.

General Motors Corp. reported sales of 121,921 cars in the period, down 21.2 percent from last year on a daily selling basis. Ford Motor Co. sales of 38,755 cars were down 33.2 percent, while Chrysler Corp. sales of 15,384 cars were off 31.5 percent.

VWA said it sold 4,328 U.S.-built Rabbits, roughly equivalent based on daily rates to 3,829 last year. American Motors Corp. sales were estimated at 4,400 cars, down 8.8 percent from last year. AMC reports sales figures only at the end of each month.

One Big Three analyst said consumers now are torn between the desire to buy a car and progressively worse economic news.

"The major economic surveys are registering steady or increasing consumer plans to buy cars," the analyst said. "But the economic outlook is uncertain."

So far this year, domestic car sales by all five makers are off 15.2 percent from last year.

GM is down 9.5 percent on sales of 1,264,973 units; Ford is off 27.6 percent on 467,141 and Chrysler is off 26.2 percent on volume of 204,121 cars.

Times New Services

The recession economists have been predicting for so long may be at hand, with some 15,000 Ford Motor Co. employees (including 2,500 in Windsor) learning the hard way the meaning of an economic slowdown.

The company already has 41,000 workers on indefinite layoff.

In order to cut its growing losses, Ford said it is closing indefinitely closing one plant, eliminating shifts at four other plants, and phasing out two manufacturing plants.

And housing construction, crippled by high mortgage rates, plunged 22 percent in March, the largest monthly drop in 20 years. (But in B.C., the situation is reversed — see page 31).

The apparent onset of a recession has sent ripples through financial institutions, and Chase Manhattan Bank today cut its prime lending rate to 19¾ per cent, down from the prevailing record 20 per cent rate.

It was the first time the prime had come down since December.

As sales of new cars continue to slump, several auto-related industries are reporting lower earnings. Stockholders of Uniroyal Inc., which makes tires and other auto components, were told the company expected a first quarter loss of $12 million compared to $6 million profit in the first quarter a year ago.

A steep drop in all industrial production was reported Tuesday by the Federal Reserve Board, the U.S. money manager. If production continues to fall, the American factory worker will pay for it — in jobs.

Treasury Secretary G. William Miller, acknowledging the economic slowdown was beginning, said in Washington the unemployment rate probably would rise to 7.25 percent by the end of the year. It is presently 6.2 percent.

The Fed reported industrial output on a seasonally adjusted basis fell 0.8 percent in March, following a decline of 0.2 percent in February. Construction supplies took the worst beating with production falling 3.6 percent.

House and Senate Republicans used the occasion of "Income Tax Day" to blame President Carter and Democratic members of Congress for soaring inflation and high taxes.

"America is losing its shirt to Jimmy Carter's high taxes and the big spending Congress," said Sen. Bill Roth (Rep-Del.) The average American household paid more than $6,100 in federal taxes for 1979 and will pay $7,800 under the new Carter budget, he said.

In other economic news:

—The Commerce Department reported corporate profits after taxes declined 0.9 percent on a seasonally adjusted basis in the last three months of 1979.

—The United Steelworkers union delegates Tuesday approved a new three-year contract that will provide basic steel workers an average $3-an-hour hike in wages.

TIP-TOE THROUGH THE LILIES: Two youngsters from the Metchosin Day care centre, 4½-year-old Jeremy Riishede and four-year-old Jennifer Hueston, wander through a sea of wild lilies at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin in Metchosin. Parishioners put off lawn mowing in the church yard so the lilies can bloom. They are the main attraction at the lily luncheon Thursday.

Auditor blasts clerks' output

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government is not getting a fair day's work for a day's pay out of the 350,000-strong public service because of sloppy management and improper training, says Auditor-General J. J. Macdonell in his annual report released today.

Macdonell, reporting to Parliament for the spending year 1978-79, says spot testing of clerical workers in the government found they were working at only 61 per cent of potential.

He says that even if their performance could be raised to the 80 per cent considered the "minimum acceptable," the work of the 50,000 clerks in the public service could be done by 38,000.

"This is a thought-provoking situation if it is typical of the government as a whole, which it probably is," the auditor-general says.

The auditor-general also reported that the unemployment insurance commission paid $290 million in overpayments in the year ending March 31, 1979.

Employment Minister Lloyd Axworthy quickly issued a statement today outlining measures to solve the problem.

In his statement, Axworthy said employers are mainly responsible for unemployment insurance overpayments because they don't fill in the record of employment forms properly.

"This area alone accounts for $125 million of the auditor-general's estimated figure of $290 million," the statement said.

The minister said that while the unemployment insurance commission now is working with employers to correct the situation, "I would like to appeal strongly to employers to assist us by asking their staff to make every effort

Canada considering Iran sanctions move

Times News Services

Canada is considering economic sanctions and an embargo against Iran to protest the seizure of American hostages at the U.S. embassy in Tehran.

"We are seriously considering the question of economic sanctions and an embargo," External Affairs Minister Mark Macguigan told reporters outside the House of Commons Tuesday. "An embargo may be a very effective step and we certainly have to give consideration to that.

"It would be a very general one which would embrace pretty well all aspects of our trade and commerce with Iran."

MacGuigan said a break in diplomatic relations with Iran would not be "meaningful" because Canada was no longer represented there.

Canada closed its embassy in Tehran in January when Ambassador Ken Taylor and his staff spirited six Americans out of Tehran.

Canadian trade with Iran amounted to less than $30 million last year, down from almost $200 million in 1978 prior to the overthrow of the Shah.

According to an FP News Service Washington report, Canadian Ambassador Peter Towe made the recommendation in a confidential telegram last Saturday to MacGuigan.

Towe's telegram apparently tied the suggested move to the vexing problem of fishing rights, under examination before the U.S. Senate foreign relations committee here this week.

Only few to get home aid

OTTAWA (CP) — Finance Minister Allan MacEachen says perhaps only 7,000 to 10,000 homeowners will be able to take advantage of proposed new federal assistance for those renewing mortgages this year.

MacEachen told reporters Tuesday that roughly 90 per cent of the estimated 350,000 persons renewing mortgages will be able to keep their monthly payments to 30 per cent of their incomes or less.

And many of the other 10 per cent may have enough equity in their homes to allow them to refinance their mortgages without government assistance, he added.

Funders deaf to VSO appeal

Local politicians held firm Tuesday and refused to increase intermunicipal cultural grants to the Victoria Symphony or the Bastion Theatre.

Both groups had protested the allocations made by Allan Purdy's cultural funding advisory group of the intermunicipal committee and the parent body directed Purdy to give them another hearing.

The symphony got only $45,000 this year as its civic grant, down from $58,000 last year. Purdy's subcommittee said the symphony hadn't worked to reduce its deficit.

The symphony actually will end up with only $30,000 as the intermunicipal committee voted to withhold $15,000 and apply it to the organization's unpaid rent at the Royal Theatre.

The Bastion got $37,000 — $5,000 more than last year. It was criticized for a too-large administrative budget and a poor over-all financial picture.

In a special report to the intermunicipal committee, Purdy said his subcommittee listened to the symphony but added: "It would seem unfair to give any special consideration to one or two organizations based on newly developed programs and/or fund-raising campaigns."

It also turned down the Bastion but added that it hoped some way could be found to assist the theatre group with its disproportionately costly theatre rental budget item.

The report from Purdy's group said they had only a total of $226,000 — shared by the four core municipalities — to give out and to give more to these groups would cut some other's cultural group's grant.

Similarly, Four Seasons Musical Theatre Society was turned down.

Purdy said his subcommittee expressed some concern at the group's plans to put on an original musical this summer based on Emily Carr at a total cost of $128,000.

The subcommittee thought there was a high degree of risk involved, as the script was not yet finished, personnel and artists hadn't been booked and the over-all budget seemed extraordinarily high for the type of venture.

The intermunicipal committee voted to receive and file Purdy's report.

The only organization to get more money out of the parent intermunicipal committee was the Victoria Festival Society.

Its grant was boosted to $12,800 from $9,000.

President Roy Wooten said if the VFS didn't get the money, muncipalities would have to take over organizing the Victorian Days and May 24 parade.

All sins will be forgiven

This is moving month at the library and if those long-overdue books are weighing heavily on your conscience don't worry. You can return them later

Moving 200,000 books is a voluminous business, to say the least, but they'll be in place by May 2

By NORMAN GIDNEY

People are so eager to get into their new downtown library they're already returning borrowed books to the new address even though it won't be open until May 2.

Library director Don Miller says the library's books are turning up there and everywhere else, even the Vancouver Island regional library branches in Colwood and Sidney.

There's no hurry if you borrowed a book before the closure and the due date is before May 2.

The library has declared an amnesty for one month following the opening of the new quarters.

"All sins forgiven — no questions asked," said Miller

Any book can be returned no matter how long ago it was borrowed and overdue fines won't be charged. Children's books are normally exempt from overdue fines.

If you must get the book back, turn it in at any of the Greater Victoria library's branches in Oak Bay, Esquimalt or Saanich.

But the wait for the new downtown library should be worth it.

Regular patrons of the grubby, rundown old library at Yates and Blanshard will marvel at the wall-to-wall carpeting, polished brass handrails and new furniture.

The library has most of the main floor and part of the second in the provincial government's Waddington building in the 700 block Broughton. The red brick and glass building is spacious and airy.

The main entrance to the library is off a central courtyard which features a three-storey high stainless steel sculpture.

Ceiling-to-floor glass admits plenty of light and there's room to browse the shelves without having to squeeze flat against the stacks to let someone pass, like the old library.

"In the old Carnegie building, if the fumes from the men's john didn't get you, the noise and the dirt would," is Miller's unsentimental description of the library's home for the last 75 years.

The new library has double the public space of the old.

More of the library's collection of 200,000 books will be on the shelves. In the old, many books were stored away in the stacks, accessible only to the staff and borrowers who made a specific request after searching the card catalogue.

"It's a bit chaotic down here," Miller said in an interview conducted amidst the controlled pandemonium of moving and unpacking.

Close to three miles of books stacked as they are on a library shelf have to be transferred.

There are 10,000 records and tape cassettes and 1,000 films to be moved as well.

"It's such a vast improvement," Miller said as he walked a reporter through the new library.

With more of its books on public display, the library expects greater use of the collection.

Besides more space, there are several new features. Carrels — small study areas — have been provided for students and researchers who want to get away from distractions.

There won't be a separate reference room. Many of the reference books formerly confined to the old library's second-floor reference room will be interfiled with the general collection according to subject matter.

You still won't be able to take them out, but they'll be easier to use.

New chairs and coffee table-style furniture will replace the hard wooden chairs and long reading room tables. But there won't be any comfortable couches or easy chairs such as the first floor lounge of the old Carnegie had. Miller said some patrons tended to nod off to sleep in them.

The organization of the new space has history, fiction, the arts, the youth section and periodicals on the main floor with the lesser-used books on science, pure and applied, the social sciences, religion, philosophy and business on the second floor.

The main entrance is dominated by two long counters. On the left side as you enter is the information centre, a sort of ready reference desk to answer questions quickly.

"I think this will really be the key to the library," said Miller.

The library's collection of files on different clubs and organizations in the Victoria area will be located here and the dozens of world telephone books will be handy.

On the right side will be the book return and checkout counter. The configuration also provides a small display area near the front door, about the size of the lounge in the old library, with panels for pinning up posters.

Fixed link derby draws a new entry

Another entry has surfaced in the unofficial Great Fixed-Link Sweepstakes.

The latest proposal, prepared by a Victoria-based consortium of engineers, is for a floating highway between Vancouver Island and the mainland.

The consortium is made up of Hatch Associates, De Leuw Cather Canada, Monenco Consultants Pacific, Hay and Anderson International and Willis, Cunliffe, Tait.

Science Minister Pat McGeer, who received the proposal Tuesday, said he will add it to the others he is putting before his cabinet colleagues.

Cabinet has yet to decide whether to approve a $500,000 to $1 million feasibility study on the basic idea of a fixed link.

The latest proposal calls for a floating, six-lane highway across Georgia Strait, anchored by cables to the sea bed.

There would also be a special lane for bicycle traffic, turnaround areas for cars, parking areas, small marinas, container port facilities, shops and other service outlets spotted along the route.

Railway rapid transit service would be provided in a channel suspended beneath the floating highway.

Small boats would be able to pass under bridge sections. For large ships, floating sections would be submerged at intervals.

Cost of the entire project is estimated in the $2.4 billion range.

Victoria developer and former Socred cabinet minister Sam Bawlf said such tolls would prevent Vancouver Island from becoming a dormitory.

Cheap shots in Saanich

If you want cheap drinks, head out to Saanich.

Mayor Mel Couvelier told the intermunicipal committee Tuesday that Saanich's recreational facilities charge low prices for beer and hard liquor.

Beer just recently went up to $1 a bottle and liquor to $1.25 a drink, which is considerably under the market, the mayor said.

He wanted his colleagues in Victoria, Oak Bay and Esquimalt to get together and set common prices.

Victoria's assistant city manager, Colin Crisp, said he will ask the intermunicipal recreation committee of administrators and managers to examine the issue and report back to the politicians.

Tillicum switch touches off spate of emergency talks

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Greater Victoria merchants, developers and politicians will hold a series of meetings this week to discuss a Saanich decision to let developers almost double the size of Tillicum shopping centre.

The Victoria business community is planning an emergency meeting at city hall Friday morning.

Broadmead Farms Ltd. executives also will meet this week to assess the impact the Tillicum increase will have on its plans for a similar development in Royal Oak.

The matter was a last-minute addition to a Capital Region District planning committee meeting today.

And Victoria Ald. Ron McKenzie is suggesting provincial legislation to limit the size of regional shopping centres.

He said Nova Scotia last fall enacted a law resricting them to 75,000 square feet.

"I'm sure (Bill) Vander Zalm is looking at it," he said, referring to the minister of municipal affairs.

Downtown Victoria Association president Philip Holmes said his group is not concerned about the Tillicum shopping centre as such.

But the DVA is worried that Tillicum will complete a triangular complex of development, including Mayfair and Town and Country shopping centres, that will create a whole new downtown outside Victoria.

CRD director Howard Drummond said Western Community representatives are determined to find a legal way to block the Tillicum addition.

They believe the expanded centre will have an adverse effect on a regional shopping centre that will be built this summer on Jacklin Road in Langford, Colwood director Drummond said.

Drummond and CRD chairman James Campbell said Saanich acted in bad faith.

A Saanich promise to restrict the size of the Tillicum development was one reason the regional board dropped a lawsuit against the municipality over the hotly-contested development.

The other reason was a promise to refer plans for future shopping centres to the regional board for approval.

Saanich council Monday removed a restrictive covenant limiting the size of the the Tillicum development to 295,000 square feet.

Tillicum developers Cal Investments Ltd. will add 200,000 square feet, making the Tillicum centre the largest on southern Vancouver Island.

Eatons said Monday it will open a store in the Tillicum centre and at the same time announced a three-year, $4 million renovation and expansion project for its downtown store.

Broadmead spokesman Merv Mawson said Tuesday the company is not ready to discuss the situation but will make a statement Friday.

A rezoning application for the 174,000-square-foot Broadmead Village will go to public hearing April 29. Broadmead has been working on development plans since since 1970.

At one point the two developers were competing with each other, but Broadmead fell behind because of strong public opposition to its plan for a 229,000-square-foot complex.

Broadmead's revised application is now to rezone 16 acres instead of the entire 35-acre site between Royal Oak Drive and Royal Oak Avenue east of Pat Bay Highway.

The company's partner, The Bay, plans to open a department store in the complex if rezoning is approved.

Saanich Ald. Irene Block, who voted in favor of the Tillicum addition, said Tuesday she doesn't believe the municipality needs two shopping centres.

"We passed Tillicum, so why not allow Eatons in, too?" Block said. "Why not make it as big and productive as you can?"

Block said the Broadmead proposal would take business from local merchants.

The Jacklin shopping centre will not be affected by Tillicum, according to Block, because it will offer different services.

Only businessmen heard as Centre foes squelched

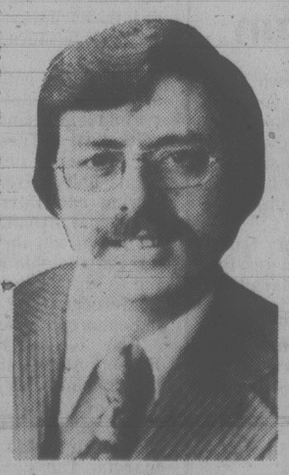

By NORMAN GIDNEY

Opponents of the waterfront convention centre were squelched Tuesday night when the Advisory Planning Commission strictly interpreted the rules to favor downtown business spokesmen who showered the project with near-unanimous praise.

A dozen downtown Victoria property owners and merchants "having an interest in property" within a block of the Inner Harbor commercial zone were allowed to speak. That phrase became the key issue when several neighborhood activists were not allowed the same privilege.

APC chairman Jim Cosh said being a taxpayer, and thus an indirect part-owner of public property in the zone, did not constitute having an interest and they therefore couldn't speak.

Several people claimed that as citizens they own part of the public causeway in front of the Empress Hotel, which is part of the harbor commercial zoning to be amended to allow public buildings, including a convention centre.

BALL
. . . legal recourse?

"Don't make a mockery of a public hearing," yelled one man as Charles Ball of the James Bay Residents' League attempted to gain the floor this way.

Cosh said he would be pleased to hear from aldermen or MLAs regarding the convention centre and the zoning change but not from ordinary taxpayers.

Anyone in the city can have his say when council holds a public hearing later, he added.

Ald. Robin Blencoe interjected that under city bylaws, the APC had no authority to restrict speakers.

He said its monthly open meetings were technically illegal as city council hadn't passed the necessary bylaw amendment.

"That means you hear from everybody or you hear from nobody," Blencoe said.

Cosh told him and other protestors that the APC was only acting on instructions of council and that was the place to argue the rights and wrongs of the rule on who may speak.

Ball said the JBRL will consider legal action to attack the procedure.

The protestors were also angry that Cosh allowed Philip Holmes to speak, although he has no direct interest in property within a block of the affected harbor zone.

Holmes, a realtor and president of the Downtown Victoria Association, has his business at the corner of Government and Broughton, two blocks from the harbor.

Besides Holmes, a dozen other downtown businessmen expressed their opinions on the convention centre.

Except for a resident of the Harbor Square condominiums on Government who worried about the project blocking the harbor view, all urged the government to get on with it.

They ranged from David Krenbrink, representing the owners of the Surfside Cabaret at 1208 Wharf, to George Woods who has a sailing school at 1010 Wharf and a representative of the Army, Navy and Air Force veterans association who own land at Wharf and Courtney.

Les Wood, newly-elected president of the Visitors Information Centre and manager of the Undersea Gardens, both in the harbor zone, said the waterfront area will die unless there are attractions like the convention centre to bring people into the area.

Architect Nick Bawlf, brother of Sam Bawlf who got the project going two years ago when he was still a cabinet minister, said he has been closely involved with redevelopment of Old Town and Wharf Street for 18 years.

"The only way to succeed in reviving the area is with a people generator," he said.

"I don't think a park or a parking lot on that site is going to achieve that."

Restaurateur Pierre Mercier, owner of Chez Pierre at 522 Yates, said in a letter to the commission: "One more park will attract the kind of citizens we are trying to get rid of."

Bastion Square retailer Jim Bennett, president of the Old Town merchants association, said after reading Mercier's letter: "Let's get on with it. Let's not delay it any longer than we have."

One member of the APC was upset at Cosh's ruling disallowing the protestors.

Ald. John Cooper, who sits on the APC with Mayor Bill Tindall and aldermen Bob Wright, Bill McElroy, Ken Sinclair and Ron McKenzie, said another half-hour would have been sufficient to hear everybody who wanted to speak.

The first hour was taken up with other APC business.

"All that we've accomplished here tonight is we've sent an awful number of people home frustrated and angry," Cooper said.

Belts tighten down on farm

By ROD EDWARDS

NEWDALE, Man. (CP) — The clouds in Bruce and Carol Dalgarno's future seemed so far away on that brilliant Prairie winter afternoon.

But the long shadow of inflation and high interest rates can hang like a pall over any interview about the economic outlook for young farm families like the Dalgarnos.

In the sun-bathed kitchen of their small but cosy farm home 60 kilometres north of Brandon, the Dalgarnos reflected sombrely on the plight of young farmers today.

"When you start paying interest on operating money of around $100,000 a year, there is quite a difference between 10 or 12 per cent and 16 or 17," said 30-year-old Bruce Dalgarno, who turned from plumbing to farming five years ago.

"Interest makes your fuel and fertilizer, all inputs, go up and that's really what gets us. Most of that money is paid out six months before you have a product to sell."

To make things worse, those interest rates are compounded by the inflated costs of all the fertilizers, chemicals, fuel and machinery needed in a farming operation.

But the Dalgarnos — parents of Andrew, 3, and Karen, 10 months — are not as concerned about economic forecasts as they are about weather bulletins.

"The variance in the crop from year to year has a bigger role to play in my take-home pay than inflation," said Bruce whose youthful looks don't yet reflect the rigors of farming.

For instance, a dry growing season last year severely reduced the crops of barley, wheat and rapeseed on the 1,400-acre farm.

"So this year, if we were looking at a new piece of machinery . . . well, you can't afford it because last year was bad and you don't have the money."

He said if an average income from his farm is $120 an acre and the crop is down 10 per cent, that amounts to $12 an acre.

"That's more than $16,000 that would have gone a long way to buying that new piece of machinery."

On the other hand, a bumper crop with good prices could mean an income of from $160 to $200 an acre and that would translate into many thousands of dollars in increased income.

"Last year was a very poor year," said Bruce, whose outgoing personality contrasts with that of his more reflective, soft-spoken wife.

"If we have another one like it this year we're going to be in a very bad financial position. And if we have two more years like this we just won't be farming, we'll be bankrupt."

Most city wives probably believe their counterparts on the farm have a decided advantage when it comes to feeding their families and paying other household bills.

But Carol Dalgarno challenges that assumption.

"In fact, we usually go shopping in the city because things are cheaper there, particularly clothing."

She said that while she grows most of her own vegetables, she still has to pay neighbors market prices for meat then must have it cut and wrapped by the local butcher.

"I just paid the grocery bill today and that was $150 for a month. But we have vegetables and meat in our freezer."

The farm family probably loses out in utility costs, though, paying an average of $50 a month for electricity and about $600 a year for propane heat.

"But I think the people on a farm are more flexible than city people," said Carol.

"If you have a poor crop you just tighten up the belt. If you have a good year you can go somewhere like Hawaii for Christmas."

Mother Teresa plans $1M trip

EDMONTON (CP) — Mother Teresa, winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, will visit St. Paul, Alta., on Aug. 2-3 for what might be a million-dollar event.

The $1-million is what organizers in the town of 4,600, 150 kilometres northeast of Edmonton, hope to give the nun for her work with lepers in India.

Organizers of the event — the Mother Teresa Habitat Institute of Alberta, a non-denominational, charitable organization in St. Paul in 1976 — are making plans.

Moved by Mother Teresa's plea for the western world to give more than money to the world's poor, the group decided to build a house in St. Paul — using volunteer labor and donations — and use the money from sale of the house to build homes for lepers in India.

What started as a project to raise about $100,000 has mushroomed. Now they're aiming at $1 million. With the news of her visit, organizers are certain contributions will flood in.

Chancellor post to ex-justice

SASKATOON (CP) — Former Supreme Court of Canada Justice Emmett Hall defeated three other candidates to become the new chancellor of the University of Saskatchewan.

Hall, 81, who succeeds the late John Diefenbaker, will assume office immediately for a three-year term. Results of the election were announced today.

Hall is scheduled to be installed as chancellor May 15. He will preside over spring convocation ceremonies that evening.

Calgarians are workaholics

CALGARY (CP) — Calgary residents are workaholics who spend much of their leisure time in front of television sets, a study commissioned by the city's parks and recreation department shows.

The study, done by consultants Rethink Inc., says Calgarians work 44 hours or more a week compared to an average 40 in most other Canadian cities.

Residents spend an average of two to three hours a day watching the tube but spend only two to six hours a week in sport, cultural or recreational activities.

Almost half the people surveyed said they leave the city for their holidays. Only 15 per cent spent their entire vacation at home.

Cave visitors warned off

CALGARY (CP) — Enormous chunks of rock falling from the roof of the Moose Mountain caves have prompted forestry officials to ask school children and tourists not to visit the caverns.

Joe Burritt, an Alberta forest service recreation officer, said it is unsafe for people to explore the popular caves 50 kilometres southwest of Calgary.

To make matters worse, body heat, laterns and fires used for light have caused ice columns in the caverns to melt. Twenty years ago, there were seven ice columns running from the rocky roof to the ground.

"The last time I went up, two years ago, there were only three left," Burritt said, blaming the weather for much of the damage.

He is especially concerned about groups of school children scrambling over loose rock on the slope leading to the cave and sending rock falling down on others below.

"We have been in a pickle," Burritt said. "We were going to close off the caves but it would be pretty difficult unless you blocked them off."

However, forestry officials are discouraging heavy use of the area this spring and Burritt has sent a letter to the public school board requesting school classes take field trips elsewhere.

"Nobody has seen the big sections of rock fall, but you can see them lying on the ice," Burritt said.
